Her Little Game

"I think she will make a fine wife. I have been calling on her for several months now and nearly always find her darning one of her father's socks."

"That caught me too, until I found out that it was the same sock."—Kansas City Journal.

MAKING THE MEN WHO HANDLE BRITAIN'S GREAT BATTLESHIPS

The navy manages somehow to get all the qualities of youth and all the experience of age combined in the same persons. The lieutenant who goes on board a warship for the first time will be at once struck with the navy's youth. The captain who commands a battleship, who is responsible for 800 lives and for two million pounds' worth of highly worked metal, seldom has 40 years to his debit, and rarely shows a grey hair. His commander, upon whose shoulders rests the whole immense burden of the actual working of the ship, is younger still, and looks it. Beyond these two, it is probable that no executive officer in the wardroom can lay claim to as many as 30 years.

The Golden Age

Five-and-twenty is perhaps the golden age in the navy. Five-and-twenty can do anything; it commands a destroyer, and believes—possibly with reason—that it could command a fleet equally well; it plays about with a 30,000 h.p. ship as an ordinary person would handle a motor launch; it delights to take charge of the complicated craft that fight under water, and now it is taking over the battleships of the air—there is nothing, as I say, that five-and-twenty cannot do, and no responsibility too big for it to carry.

That is the outcome of the training in the navy. They take those who are destined to command in their early youth; they house them up under the influence of very old and very excellent traditions; from the beginning the bit of discipline is put in their mouths and the saddle of responsibility upon their backs.

Makings of the Man

The "sprotty" (midshipman) of 18 when he first goes to sea finds himself in charge of a section of men, and takes his turn in keeping watch. Then he girds his dirk about his loins and assumes command of the steam pinnace, otherwise known as the picket-boat. He navigates that hard-worked craft on countless journeys between ship and shore, on shoring days and inky black nights, carrying his superior officers to and fro on their various occasions. And woe betide him if anything goes amiss, if he scrapes his paint off against the piles, if he doesn't run the boat for all she's worth, and keep schedule time to the minute, or if, by unhappy chance, he soaks a party of the skipper's guests as he lurches through the wash of an excursion steamer.

The Result

But that is the way in which the men who command in the navy are made; that is the sort of training that makes a youngster of three or four and twenty a man of pipe and varied experience, that enables him lightly and confidently to undertake the navigation of a Dreadnought one moment and the manoeuvring of a submarine the next—that makes him the very man to handle a 12-inch gun turret in a stiff action, or to control the whole fire of a ship from the platform high up on the mast.

MERELY MABEL REMARKS

That more than a few of the world's greatest men have been shaky on spelling.

That the blasting on the dry-dock works is getting more like a naval battle every day.

That with a lightning red devil plus a good going Gamewell fire alarm system Rupert's fire risks should dwindle.

That these are piping times for the city engineer.

That the interest displayed by young Prince Rupert in the Park Commission Zoo is phenomenal.

That the Zoo is annoyed if you make the mistake of calling it "Noo"rupolis Hill.

That after that one she won't put her head out again until tomorrow.

KEEP OUT!

"KEEP OUT!" used to hang as a sign on every factory door. The old idea of secrecy in business made it seem a crime to show outsiders processes, materials, and methods of manufacture.

Now the white light of publicity is being let in by those who depend on public favor for business profits and business growth. The "keep out" sign is disappearing from factory doors and the "welcome" sign is taking its place.

Candor and honesty form the backbone of modern Advertising. Men tell the truth, and it pays. Modern selling relies more and more on the confidence and good will of the buyer.

To-day, eyes are too sharp and intelligences too keen to make deceit possible. Absolute frankness in Advertising is the straight road to confidence. The public demands the light; it abominates and fears darkness.

To-day, many canning factories, packing houses, bakeshops, and public kitchens welcome visitors, concealing nothing.

To-day, many public service companies use the newspapers to tell the truth about themselves.

To-day, many big industrial enterprises are open without hindrance to the inspection of an interested public.

To-morrow, many more companies, depending for their success and prosperity on public confidence, will lift the curtains that veil their board and workrooms—they, too, will come to printing candid advertisements in the newspapers.

The public may overlook, but does not forgive, a lie or an abuse of its confidence. The public regards with suspicion those who attempt to serve it in secrecy and silence. The public is repelled by juggled facts or befogging words. The public rewards with its favor and money those who tell it the truth. It walks and shops where the light shines and where the paths are straight.

Throw on the light!
