9 In Memoriam

In loving memory of my dear husband and father, Andreas Nickolas Pavlikis.

Since our great sorrow fell
Our hearts still ache with sadness
And secret tears flow
What it meant to lose you
No one will ever know.
Ever remembered by his wife and family. (59p)

BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

On rare occasions, an alert defender has the opportunity to prevent declarer from taking a marked finesse. In today's deal Mr. Champion opened the jack of hearts against the three no trump contract.

Mr. Abel elected to win with the queen on the board. With the spade suit practically wide open and only six winners, things didn't look too good. He led a club from dummy and finessed the ten.

When this held, the prospect was a little brighter. However, if Mrs. Keen had at least three small clubs with her king, it would be necessary to finesse clubs twice more to realize four tricks in the suit. And that meant finding two more entries to dummy.

Mr. Abel

Mr. Abel figured that if Mr. Champion's heart holding included the ten (as seemed likely from the opening lead) then he could lead his small heart and finesse dummy's nine. Later the lead of the king of hearts to dummy's ace would furnish another entry.

He led the low heart. But Mr. Champion had other ideas. He promptly played the ten. It took dummy's ace to win this—and now the hope for two heart entries was gone. Mr. Champion took full credit for a fine defensive play and of course he was justified.

Mr. Abel could have made his contract by playing differently at trick one, regardless of the subsequent defense. The winning play was a little hard to see and somewhat beyond Mr. Abel's capabilities, although Mr. Heinsite, naturally, described it as "automatic." It was to win the first trick with dummy's ace of hearts and to drop the king from the closed hand.

On this line of play both of Mr. Abel's remaining hearts would be lower than the hearts in dummy. Dummy's nine and queen would both furnish entries for successive club finesses, no matter how Mr. Champion played.
