BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Timing a hand at bridge is simply arranging to cash your winners before the opponents can cash theirs.

As an illustration, dream up a hand where you hold an 11-card suit, solid from the top, and two worthless singletons. Opposite one singleton, dummy has several worthless cards. Opposite the other, dummy has the ace and king.

Obviously you have 13 cold winners—except for the inconvenience rule of the game which gives the defending side the privilege of leading first.

The defenders undoubtedly will cash the ace of the suit in which you and the dummy have nothing and, if you have bid a grand slam, you are down before you get started.

Mr. Muzzy

With such a setup, no amount of skill in timing will help you. But there are many situations where declarer can help himself by timing his play in a certain manner.

Take today's deal, for example. Mr. Muzzy won the opening spade lead with the king. Looking the hand over, it appeared to him that he could give up two clubs, then make three tricks in that suit himself. These, with two spades, three hearts and a diamond would total nine.

"Relax, partner," he said. "The rubber is over." Mr. Champion shuddered.

At trick two Mr. Muzzy led a club to dummy's nine and lost to the king. Mr. Abel, who had played the jack of spades at trick one, now returned the queen, knocking out Mr. Muzzy's last spade stopper.

When in with the ace of clubs, Mr. Abel led a spade and Mrs. Keen ran the rest of that suit to break the contract.

Mr. Muzzy could not be certain of making this hand by any line of play, but a better shot would have been to go after diamonds, a suit in which it was at least possible to develop a sufficient number of winners without losing the lead in diamonds more than once.

As good a play as any was to lead a low diamond toward dummy at trick two. Either opponent could win and return a spade.

On winning the second spade, Mr. Muzzy could go to dummy with a heart, cash three tricks in that suit, then lead a diamond and finesse against the king. When that finesse worked, the contract would be assured.

Senate kills draft bill

WASHINGTON (AP)—The United States Senate has killed for this year a bill calling for an unrestricted player draft in major league baseball to give the proposed Continental League a boost.

The measure also had sought to spell out limited exemptions from anti-trust laws for professional baseball, football, basketball and hockey.

By a 73-to-12 vote Tuesday night, the Senate sent the bill back to its judiciary committee, which may consider new legislation along similar lines next year.

Bill Shea, founder of the Continental, said the Senate action was a "severe blow, but we are not finished."

Spokesmen for organized baseball expressed satisfaction.

"It was a bad piece of legislation which would hurt the Continental as well as the American League and National League," said baseball commissioner Ford Frick. Joe Cronin, president of the American League, and Warren Giles, president of the National League, agreed.
