BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

"WHAT'S THE use of learning all those safety plays?" commented Mr. Muzzy. "They come up so seldom."

"They come up often enough," replied Mr. Champion caustically. "You just don't recognize them."

I suggest that Mr. Champion's reply is worth some quiet thought.

The No Trump slam in today's deal was makable against any defense. In fact, it was there against any possible distribution of the defender's cards. But Mr. Muzzy managed to go down one. He yelled loud and long about his bad luck. Let's see how unlucky he really was.

Mr. Muzzy

Mr. Dale opened the jack of clubs. Mr. Muzzy won with the king and promptly laid down tht ace of spades. And now, with four spades to the queen - ten behind dummy's king-jack, Mrs. Keen had the cards to defeat the contract.

With a suit like the spades in today's hand, the correct safety play to avoid two losers is to play the king first.

If both opponents follow suit, your troubles are over because it is proven that the suit will break no worse than 3-1.

In this particular deal Mr. Muzzy should have led a low spade to dummy's king at trick two. Mr. Dale would show out. Now on a low spade return, Mrs. Keen would have to split her honors to prevent the nine from winning. Mr. Muzzy would win with the ace and it would be an easy matter to knock out Mrs. Keen's second honor and, later, to pick up her fourth and last spade.

If Mr. Dale follows suit to the first spade lead, again the king from dummy would be the right play. Then if Mrs. Keen shows out, placing all four outstanding spades in Mr. Dale's hand, simply lead a low spade back to the ace and a third spade toward dummy's jack. Mr. Dale would win with the queen, but later dummy's jack would pick up his ten.

So Mr. Muzzy had no justified complaint about his luck. Remember, it is necessary not only to know how to play suits for safety—but also to recognize the situations where you should put that knowledge to work.

TOMORROW: Finessing for safety.
