Opening lead: King of ♥

We have in the past devoted so much time to discrediting ancient generalities about card playing, that it is comforting, for a change, to indorse one that has stood up through the years. It is the one that cautions declarer against having his own trumps reduced below the number required for extracting purposes. (This, of course, is not intended to apply to those hands which are being played at a cross-ruff, where naturally the plan is to make separately as many trumps as possible.)

Today we have an illustration of a hand in which it was suicidal for declarer to have his trumps reduced to exactly the number held by one adversary. The final contract is sound enough and the manner of reaching it is approved. West realized that it was futile to compete when partner had announced a trickless hand. North's jump raise was proper in view of the fact that partner had shown strength and he himself had previously promised nothing at all.

The king of hearts was opened and the suit continued. Declarer ruffed. He drew two rounds of trumps and got the bad news when West failed on the second lead. He abandoned trumps at once in favor of establishing the clubs, but West refused to take the first club trick. He did take the second and permitted his partner to ruff the third round. In the end a diamond had to be lost and the contract was defeated.

At the end of trick two declarer was doomed. If he drew trumps the heart suit would be run against him, if he failed to draw them the club ruff was inevitable. It was at trick two that declarer should have taken inventory. Since a diamond had to be conceded at all events, what better time was there than now to give up the trick? West will be rendered helpless. He cannot profitably continue with hearts because the ruff can be taken in dummy, and trumps extracted. Any other lead causes declarer no embarrassment at all.

True enough, declarer would have made the hand against a 3-2 trump break, but a 4-1 split can hardly be looked upon as a remote holding. The crux of the situation is that the concession of the diamond loser at this point does not stand to lose anything. South would have done well to give before it hurts.
