Blackwood on BRIDGE

Going against players who are better than you are, it is sometimes winning practice to make bids, leads and plays which are out of the ordinary and which are inclined to put your opponents on the spot for a crucial decision early in the hand.

If you play in a completely routine, textbook manner, your more skillful and experienced opponents figure to outplay you in the long run. But even the great Mr. Champion, for example, cannot see through the backs of the cards and, if put to a tough guess early, is wrong as anyone else.

Mr. Champion

Of course every hand will not lend itself to this treatment and I am not recommending that you throw all caution to the winds and lead any card at random in the desperate hope that "something will happen." You've still got to pick your spots.

In today's hand it was Mr. Dale's opening lead. Before telling you his choice, look at Mr. Champion's prospects. He has to lose one heart and one club. If he can finesse successfully against the queen of spades, he has just one spade loser and will make his contract.

But Mr. Dale's opening lead was the ace of spades. He followed up with the deuce of spades — and Mr. Champion had a hard decision to make at trick two.

It it common to lead an ace from A Q 2 against a suit contract? We must admit the answer is no. Mr. Champion knew it was possible, but he decided it wasn't probable. In any case, there was no way in the world for him to know for sure. He went up with dummy's king — and that blew the contract. Mr. Abel showed out and he now had two spade losers for a sure one-trick set.

CHARTER
HIGH-SEAS FISHING

The Fisheries Research Board of Canada will require two vessels for fishing and tagging salmon on the high seas during the period May-August, 1961. One vessel will fish with floating longlines (to be supplied by the Board); the second vessel with a purse seine.

Both vessels will need to be equipped for accurate navigation on the high seas and, in addition to the crew, must have accommodation for two to three scientific observers.

The Board will also require for rent a large salmon seine, which will be modified for the intended purpose. It is possible that a combined bid for vessel and seine will be acceptable.

The Board is anxious to make the best possible selection of vessels and crews for these operations, and invites all interested parties to apply.
