9 In Memoriam

HALL—In loving memory of our dear father, William, who passed away October 3, 1956, and our dear mother Bessie, who passed away August 28, 1957.
Tonight the stars are gleaming
On two lonely silent graves,
Where sleeps in dreamless slumber
The ones we loved but could not save.
In tears we saw them sinking
We watched them fade away,
Our hearts were almost broken
They fought so hard to stay,
But when we saw them sleeping
So peacefuly free from pain,
We could not wish them back
T'io suffer that again.
—Sadly missed by their families.

BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Mr. Heinsite isn't too fond of Mrs. Fusty, mainly because she refuses to listen to his long-winded post-mortems after every hand. And when he is berating his partner for some real or fancied misplay Mrs. Fusty always takes up for the underdog.

He thought he had her dead to rights in today's deal. We'll see how he came out.

Mr. Dale won the opening diamond lead with the ace and returned the queen. Mrs. Heinsite won the second trick with the king of diamonds. He led to dummy's ace of clubs, returned a trump and got the bad news when Mr. Dale discarded a small club. He went up with the ace of spades. Now he entered dummy twice in hearts and ruffed two of dummy's clubs. He went to dummy a third time with a heart, led the last club and ruffed it with the jack of spades.

Mr. Heinsite

Obviously, he thought he had handled the situation rather cleverly. "It's your play," he said to Mrs. Fusty, winking at the kibitzers.

"So it is," Mrs. Fusty replied as she underruffed with the five of spades.

Whether or not she had experienced this same situation forty years ago in a whist game we will never know as she never explains the plays she makes. Anyway, she had made the only play to beat the contract. Mr. Heinsite was still on lead and he had left the queen-eight of spades and a diamond.

If he led a spade, Mrs. Fusty would win two spade tricks with her ten and king, then cash her good heart for the setting trick. If he led a diamond, Mrs. Fusty would discard her heart and let her partner win. She would then hold a perfect tenace over Mr. Heinsite's spades.

Note that the "natural" play of overruffing the jack of spades with the king at the 10th trick would be a losing proposition.

What would you return? A spade return from the ten-five would go into Mr. Heinsite's queen-eight. The heart return could be ruffed in dummy while the losing diamond was discarded from the closed hand.

Prince George nurses asked to reconsider

PRINCE GEORGE (CP)—The board of directors of the city's 90-bed hospital will ask four nurses who resigned from the institution to reconsider their move.

The decision was made at a hospital board meeting here Thursday night, called after six staff members submitted their resignations over a supervisory problem.

Two resignations were accepted.

The meeting followed an investigation into "internal difficulties" at the institution by Dr. E. N. Boettcher of Victoria, chairman of the administrators' division of the British Columbia Hospital Association.

The meeting was closed to the press, but five recommendations, aimed at relieving the trouble, were made public by the board.

They included statements that the board members or employees must not engage in "surveillance professional care" unless authorized and that the director of nursing, Mrs. Marjorie Greene, be not allowed to attend board meetings.

It was also decided that administrator Bruce Thompson will give up his job as purchasing agent for the hospital and return as full-time administrator.

The board also said affects of the recommendations will be reviewed in six months.

VICTORIA (CP)—About 500 delegates are expected to attend the 55th annual convention of the B.C. School Trustees Association here Oct. 19-21. Taking part in a discussion on "education is everybody's business" will be Joe Morris, district president of the International Woodworkers of America; Dean George Curtis of the University of B.C. and W. C. R. Jones, vice-president, Powell River Company and Mrs. Betty MacDonald, past-president of the B.C. Parent-Teacher Association.

PM challenged to try to get loan from bank

TORONTO (CP)—Prime Minister Diefenbaker has been challenged by a member of his own party to "disguise himself as a small businessman and try to get a bank loan."

The challenge was made Wednesday night by Frank O'Byrne of the Agincourt Progressive Conservative Association at a meeting addressed by Frank McGee, PC member of Parliament for York-Scarborough.

Mr. McGee said he had been assured by his own bank manager 10 days ago that no qualified borrower had yet been refused a loan in his bank during the current money shortage.

But Mr. O'Byrne said Mr. Diefenbaker should disguise himself as a small businessman and walk into any bank in Canada and try to get a bank loan.

"He may be fooling himself about tight money, but he is not fooling us," he said.
