The bidding:

East	South	West	North
Pass	1♠	Pass	6♠
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Four of ♥

Today's hand came to me with a vehement rebuke from the woman who submitted it. She was bitter over having followed, to her severe loss, the advice I had handed out in one of my texts. It was on the subject of bidding slams and I observed that when you are quite sure you can make a slam and know the contract slam and know the contract best suited for the hand it is advisable to bid it straightforwardly without running around corners and making a big to-do. And she quoted me verbatim: "In the first place, your partner will have no difficulty in making it, and in the second place everybody at the table will be impressed with your dashing manner." Her complaint was this: "As North, I followed your advice. In the first place my partner had no difficulty going down one and in the second place, no one at the table was the least bit impressed."

While in a sense I sympathize with her, I should like to say on my own behalf that there is such a thing as being taken too literally. I am afraid that she cannot win me over to the soundness of her leap to a slam. "I didn't see how he could miss if he had an opening bid," she said. Well, he had 15 high card points, and he could very readily miss.

Sympathy goes out to her because proper play could have landed the contract. In an effort to dispose of the losing diamond, declarer placed his trust in a three-three break of the club suit, hoping to discard the losing diamond on dummy's fourth club. Since an even break of an even number of cards (six) is against odds, declarer should have sought a line of play that offered a greater chance of success. One was available; the chance that the club honors were in different hands (plus the added chance that East held them both).

After drawing trumps a low club is led from dummy and the nine finessed. This will lose to West's jack and declarer wins his return and another club is led from dummy and the ten finessed. The losing diamond is then discarded on dummy's king of clubs.

The recommended play will lose only when West holds both the queen and jack of clubs. In other words, declarer affords himself a 3 to 1 chance for success.
