BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

If Miss Brash had held a fairly good hand—about ten points in high cards, or better—she would have redoubled on the first round of bidding. Her jump to three spades showed a good trump fit but little in the way of high card strength and its main purpose was to keep her opponents out of the bidding.

She was successful in keeping her opponents out, but not her partner. Mrs. Fusty went on to the spade game.

Mr. Abel's double did him no good at all, although it may be said that better players than he have underestimated Mrs. Fusty's masterful dummy play. He won the first trick with the king of hearts and followed with the jack.

Mrs. Fusty

Mrs. Fusty ruffed the second heart and paused to try to count up to ten winners in the hand. It was not easy. In fact it looked hopeless. But the precision-timing she applied to the play worked a miracle.

At trick three she led the deuce of diamonds. With some reluctance Mr. Abel went up with the ace. He returned the queen of clubs and Mrs. Fusty won with dummy's king and led another club to her ace.

She carefully avoided a trap at this point. It looked no natural to cash her three good diamonds and discard as many losers as possible from the board. But that action would have lost the hand, in spite of the fact that the opposing diamonds were divided 4-4 and nobody could ruff in.

She did cash the king of diamonds and discard the last club from the board. She also cashed the queen of diamonds and played a heart from dummy.

Now she ruffed a club, returned a heart and ruffed it with the seven of spades.

Her next play was the good jack of diamonds—which she ruffed in dummy. She had now accomplisher her purpose of stripping Mr. Champion's hand of everything but spades—and at a time when the lead was in dummy. On the lead of a heart from dummy Mr. Champion ruffed with the five of spades. (It would not have helped him to ruff higher.)

Mrs. Fusty overruffed with the ten of spades and Mr. Abel had to follow suit. She then cashed her ace of spades for the tenth trick. Her last card was a small club, on which the defenders' king and queen of trumps fell together.

Lucky Lager combines the best barley, the most flavorful hops, the purest water and the most modern brewing. Nothing but the best can produce true lager beer.

Lucky Lager is a special process from start to finish. A famous German brewing technique and extra ageing gives Lucky it's renowned body, taste and aroma.
