Pro wrestlers top celebrations

Boxing to lead off tomorrow at Centre

More than 1,000 pounds of bulging muscle will virtually shake the Civic Centre at 8 p.m. tomorrow as four top-notch imported wrestlers indulge in the manly art of mayhem.

In one of the best wrestling cards ever scheduled in Prince Rupert and tabbed as good as any seen in British Columbia, such famous wrestlers as Mike Mazurki, Curtis Iaukea, Antone Leone and Kit Fox will take the ring in two separate matches and a tag team fight.

Opening the show will be a boxing card staged by local leather slingers. Mario Pitre meets 141-pound Jim (Red) Morberg, George Alchuck takes on popular Reggie Phillips (137 pounds). No one has agreed to take on challenger Billy Saunders.

Winners of the boxing matches, which will be fought in three two minute rounds, will receive Jubilee trophies.

Earlier in the day sports will once again be dominant during the Elks-sponsored Dominion Day celebrations as races and games of all types will be run off at Roosevelt Park and McClymont swimming pool. Prizes totaling more than $200 will be awarded winners.

Mike Mazurki, 250-pounds, is well-known in the ring and also in Hollywood circles. Labelled as a "bad man" of the movies he usually continues these tactics in the ring.

Iaukea, the 285-pound "Hawaiian Hurricane" is also known in the professional football ranks as he has played with the San Francisco '49ers and B.C. Lions.

Kit Fox, the 225-pound Comanche Indian, is as concerned about the poor and delinquent persons as he is about his wrestling career. It is a common sight to see him at hospitals and police stations trying to straighten out persons who have committed crimes.

Antone "Ripper" Leone, as villainous a person as ever hit the ropes applies many a painful hold and fights "with no holds barred".

Fox will meet Leone in the opener while Iaukea clashes with Mazurki. Fox and Iaukea will then team up to tackle Mazurki and Leone in a tag team fight. Referees will be Len Harrigton and George Howe Sr.

Hockey world loses another great as second Patrick brother dies

VANCOUVER (CP) — Frank Patrick, the man who introduced the blue line, the forward pass and the post-season playoff system to hockey, has died, removing the second member of the famous hockey family within a month.

Frank Patrick, 74, died from a heart ailment Wednesday exactly four weeks after his brother, Lester, the renowned Silver Fox, 76, died of cancer in Victoria.

Both were members of the hockey Hall of Fame in Kingston, Ont.

"Canada has lost a great athlete and a great citizen," said Fred Cyclone Taylor, one of Frank Patrick's hockey contemporaries.

"He compared favorably with any defenceman of the past or present."

FAILING HEALTH

Since 1945, Frank Patrick's health had been failing. He suffered a heart attack that year, four years after ending a 38-year career in hockey that took him from player to coach to manager to league executive.

He had thought of death, but said he didn't fear it.

"There are two ways to look at death," he said in a hospital-room interview earlier this year. "One way is to believe that life is infinite. Maybe it is. It is difficult to believe that a creator who made such a lovely thing as life would not allow it to go on after death.

"But on the other hand, if there is nothing after death, we can't do anything about it. There's no point worrying about something we can't help."

HELPED HOCKEY

In hockey, Frank Patrick was able to help many things.

He was often called the "brains of modern hockey" and today's official rule book still contains 22 pieces of legislation he introduced.

Lester and Frank were the first to build artificial ice arenas. In 1910 the Patricks persuaded their father to sell his timber interests for $1,000,000 cash and they built ice plants in Vancouver and Victoria, then launched the Pacific Coast League as a major league.

Frank was born in Ottawa December 21, 1885 and grew up in Montreal. He played as an amateur in that city in 1903-04 and later at McGill.

Graduating in 1908, he moved with his family to Nelson, in the British Columbia Kootenays.

WENT BACK EAST

But he was soon back in the East, starring alongside Lester with the Renfrew Millionaires at a salary of $3,000 for a 10-game season.

He played in the East until 1911 when the PCHL was formed. With Lester, he maintained it as a major league until 1926.

Then, as the National Hockey League expanded and the Patricks couldn't afford the player-war price, Frank arranged a $250,000 sale of players whom the NHL could have had for nothing if it had waited. In the PCHL, Frank starred on defence for Vancouver, managed the team and acted as president of the league — all at the same time — to establish a record unique in the sport.

In 1915, his Millionaires, with names like Cyclone Taylor, Frank Nighbor, Mickey McKay and Hughie Lehman, defeated Ottawa Senators for the world title in straight games. The Stanley Cup came to the West coast for the first time.

PCHL FOLDED

When the PCHL folded and the Patricks sold out to the NHL, Frank resisted offers to go East. Lester accepted them and went on to a more illustrious hockey career than Frank was to enjoy.

Frank finally moved East in 1933 as managing director of the National League under president Frank Calder for a year.

He coached Boston Bruins for two years then returned to the West coast until 1939 when he was named manager of Montreal Canadiens. Two years later he left hockey.

Lester Patrick's sons — Lynn and Muzz — continue to keep the hockey name alive. Lynn manages the Boston Bruins and Muzz the New York Rangers.

Frank's one son Joseph played outstanding hockey at Harvard but didn't continue professionally. He now lives in New York. Frank's wife Catherine and two daughters also survive. Funeral arrangements were not announced.
