ESSENTIAL SERVICES PERFORMED DAILY

Generous donations needed March 25 to save life of Red Cross branch

By BETTY WADDELL

The Canadian Red Cross will be sending a canvasser to your door on March 25 to ask for your money to support them in the essential services they perform each day.

I am not only speaking of the earthquakes at Agadir and Montana, nor of the train wreck near Bakersfield. I am talking of the essential service so frequently administered right in the local hospitals.

Available to every person in Canada is blood.

What does that mean, why get so excited—blood—schmood.

Well this is what it means—life.

And I have a reason to be excited. We stand to lose this service if we are unable to raise enough money to keep the Red Cross alive. Our lives can be saved if we first save the life of the Red Cross.

Blood is as common as every day. We have all seen it and we all have it. But what is it and why mess around with it in its highly perishable form? Why not produce it in a lab, seal it in a can and leave it on a shelf to be opened when needed?

Because no scientist can artificially produce living cells in the lab. Blood is the medium through which every part of the body receives food and oxygen and sends back waste products after use.

It has the ability to fight and kill disease causing bacteria. It can form a clot over a wound.

These and other functions make it essential to life. Blood is able to go to all parts of the body because it is a liquid. The liquid part of the blood is called plasma and suspends the working cells. It also feeds the body proteins and fats for growth, repair and energy.

The plasma carries our immunity to disease. The blood is red because of some very important cells which travel in the plasma and carry oxygen from the lungs to the body and return with carbon dioxide to be breathed away.

The plasma also carries white blood cells which have the ability to eat disease causing bacteria. The act of forming a clot over a wound and thus preventing haemorrhage is indeed a complex matter and can only be performed by healthy blood.

If at any time a part of the body is not fed by blood for even a short interval, the effected part dies. At time of injury, caused accidently or by surgery, if great amounts of blood are lost, the only way to keep life in the body is to replace the lost blood. It can be replaced only by more human blood and here is where the Red Cross fulfills our need.

DISEASED BLOOD

Sometimes, our blood becomes diseased. The cells change and are no longer able to perform the task for which they were intended. The administration of another persons healthy blood can keep the body alive while the diseased blood strives to return to normal.

Again, we call on the Red Cross for this blood.

To remedy some of the body maladies only part of the blood is required. Perhaps just the plasma, or just packed red cells, the blood clotting ingredients, or the disease fighting serums.

If the whole blood or the packed cells were not used in two weeks after it was received from a donor, the other parts could be separated and utilized.

No blood is wasted. The Red Cross wants to keep up its Prince Rupert clinics. Will you help by giving a little more money than you had planned?

Actors on strike face unique power of AMPP

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — What are the actors up against in their strike against the major movie studios?

They're facing an organization unique in American industry. There are other trade associations and intra-industry bodies, but nothing like the Association of Motion Picture Producers.

About the closest thing you'll find to it is in baseball. Producer chieftain Eric Johnston wields much the same power as does the baseball commissioner.

The Chicago Black Sox scandal in 1919 prompted the baseball bosses to hire Judge Kensaw Mountain Landis to set their ball parks in order. A series of movie scandals in the same era brought public censure and prompted the film heads to ban together.

It is the AMPP that negotiates labor contracts for the studios through executive vice-president Charles Boren.

The AMPP bylaws list these aims:

"To assist in fostering the common interests of those engaged in the motion picture industry . . . by establishing and maintaining the highest possible moral and artistic standards . . . by developing the educational as well as the entertainment value and general usefulness of the motion picture, by diffusing accurate and reliable information . . . by reforming abuses . . . by securing freedom from unrest or unlawful exactions. . . ."

This covers a lot of ground, and so has the AMPP. One of its important accomplishments to the industry has been in combatting the hundreds of would-be censors in local and state governments.
