SELLING WELL—The Post Office Department says that nine Canadian postage stamps, specially mounted on a card, are selling well and seem particularly popular with tourists. The card, with unusuable stamps totalling 50 cents, sells for the same amount. About 50,000 have been produced. —CP photo.

Blackwood on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Before you make an opening lead you have seen just the 13 cards in your hand. When next you are on lead for the defense, you have seen the 13 cards in dummy, too, and you have watched the play to one or more tricks.

On a judgment basis your second lead should be better than your first lead.

Mr. Abel wasn't too keen about any opening from his hand today but he finally decided on the king of spades. The defense would have been a little easier if he had chosen the king of clubs but there was no way for him to know that.

Miss Brash let the king of spades hold and Mr. Abel had another chance at the winning defense. Hoping to get his partner to lead back a diamond toward his ace-queen, he came out with a low club.

Miss Brash

But Miss Brash won, cashed the ace of trumps, finessed the jack of spades and discarded a diamond on the ace of spades. Thus she lost only a spade, a heart and a diamond, making her doubled contract.

You and I see that the best defense was to switch to diamonds at trick two. It's tough leading from ace-queen, but Mr. Abel should have made that play nevertheless.

Mr. Dale had to have something for his raise to two clubs. He had nothing in spades. On the bidding it was practically certain that he had no winners in hearts. It appeared reasonable to assume that he held either the ace of clubs or the king of diamonds.

If Mr. Abel had laid down the ace of diamonds at trick two, Mr. Dale would have flashed the nine in an attempt to announce possession of the king.

If he had not held the king he would have played his lowest diamond in which case Mr. Abel could have led a club to his partner's (supposed) ace.

The defenders would get either a spade, a heart and two diamonds or they would get a trick in each suit.

The bidding:

Opening lead: King of spades.

It is true that if Mr. Dale had held the ace of clubs and not the king of diamonds, then a club shift at trick two—and a diamond return—would have beat the contract two tricks. However, Mr. Abel's first job was to be sure to set the contract at all.

Incidentally, Miss Brash's concession of the first trick was very good as it put Mr. Abel on the spot for the right shift before he knew too much about the hand.

Heavy fog greets royal couple anew as Canadian tour draws near close

CHARLOTTETOWN (CP)—The Queen and Prince Philip headed for Nova Scotia and the final days of their coast-to-coast Canadian tour today. Heavy Atlantic fog again delayed their schedule.

The royal couple left this island province at 11 a.m.—two hours late—aboard an RCAF aircraft for Trenton, N.S.

The same kind of Atlantic soup that almost disrupted the royal couple's arrival last month in Newfoundland covered most of Nova Scotia this morning. Every airport in the province, including Trenton, was "socked in," but there was hope that a warm sun would burn off the fog at most inland places.

HEADING HOME

The Queen and Philip were to pay an hour and a half visit in the New Glasgow area before leaving for Sydney. After two hours in Cape Breton's city, they were to leave for Halifax. They head home from Halifax Saturday night to end their 45-day tour.

The Queen and Philip had a day of varied activities in Prince Edward Island Thursday highlighted by a harness racing program at Charlottetown.

They spent half an hour at the 100-acre showplace farm of Mr. and Mrs. Willard Prowse of Brackley, P.E.I., where the prince and 12-year-old Ernest Prowse got together for a chat on a mutual hobby—coin collecting.

When Ernest told Philip that he collected coins, the prince replied: "So do I. Let's go look at your collection."

During the harness racing, the Queen tried twice to peek over six-foot-seven Premier Alex Matheson, seated to her far right. The premier suddenly noticed and slouched down in his chair.

HECTIC DAY

The day's activities were so hectic that the Queen didn't have a chance to change her dress until a garden party late in the afternoon. About 1,500 persons attended the party on the rolling lawns of Government House.

Earlier the Queen cut a ribbon to official open HMCS Queen Charlotte, a new naval establishment here. She visited a frozen food plant, two rural homes and the province's national park on the north shore, where she attended a government luncheon.

About 15 minutes before the royal tourists were to drive at a frozen food plant at nearby Sherwood, a water pump that supplies 10,000 gallons of water a minute failed. The fire department was called in to pump water so the Queen could see the packing of frozen peas.

Manitoba giving doctors power to veto parents

WINNIPEG (CP)—John Eckmire, a Jehovah's Witnesses leader, said Thursday Manitoba's proposed legislation to allow doctors to overrule parental objections to providing blood transfusions is in "the Hitler tradition."

Cadets meet Queen Mother

LONDON (CP)—Twenty-five Canadian air cadets, halfway through a one-month tour of Britain, met the Queen Mother Thursday at Sandringham, the Queen's country residence. The cadets were taken to Sandringham by Arthur Smith, Progressive Conservative MP for Calgary East and vice-president of the Air Cadet League of Canada.
