QUEEN

Her London doctors — Lord Evans, Sir John Weir and John H. Peel—all have stated the Queen is in good health.

BIRTH PLACE NOT SET

It is not yet known where the birth will take place. But the Royal Family plans to spend the Christmas season as usual at Sandringham, their Norfolk home 150 miles northeast of London, and February and March at Buckingham Palace.

Colville told reporters at Buckingham Palace:

"The Queen was determined to avoid the cancellation of the Canadian tour which would have caused disappointment to millions."

He said the Queen was emphatic in insisting while on tour that her condition not be known.

INSTRUCTIONS TO STAFF

"She issued personal instructions to those few people including, of course, the doctor attending her on the tour, Surgeon-Captain Derek Steele-Perkins, that she did not wish her condition to become known."

Colville went on:

"The Queen's reasons for this were because it could not be stated at that time that it was a certainty that the Queen would be having a child, and therefore the doctor could not publicly commit his patient without a proper medical examination, which Her Majesty did not want carried out before her return to the United Kingdom and then by her own doctors in London."

Charles and Anne already have been told the news about "mummy."

QUEEN KEPT CRADLE

Although the Queen has not had a child for nine years, she has kept the cradle and baby carriage used for her two children. They are the same as those the Queen and Princess Margaret used themselves.

Both the Queen's children were born before her accession to the throne in February, 1952, upon the death of King George VI.

Sir William Gilliatt, the royal gynaecologist who delivered both Charles and Anne, died in 1956 at the age of 71.

PAINLESS CHILDBIRTH

An advocate of painless childbirth, he was assisted at Anne's birth by Peel, who is expected to be the gynaecologist for the new royal birth.

Weir, who is 79, also was present at Anne's birth.

The first official hint that a new royal birth was pending came earlier in the day from Lord Evans, the Queen's physician, who is an obstetrician.

Before leaving on a European vacation, he said that "the Queen is in good health—I can say no more than that."

At the Queen's request, Lord Evans examined her Monday, a day after she returned from Canada.

BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

So much is written about the opening lead that you might gain the impression there isn't much else of importance in the defense of a hand.

Actually, the killing defense on most hands, if it is discovered at all, is hit upon after the opening lead.

The opening lead is one of the favorite subjects of bridge writers because it lends itself readily to neat classification. Compact little crarts can be easily prepared, listing the various openings in the order of their desirability.

A certain opening can be labeled, with propriety, as a "good" opening, while another is called a "poor" opening.

The opening lead is blind in that the opener has not yet seen the cards in dummy. After the first trick, however, he has seen those cards and they may be sharply at variance with the mental picture he had formed, based on the bidding.

Mr. Dale

He may have it in mind to lead a certain suit the next time he got in. But the looks of the dummy and the play to the first few tricks may show that lead to be absolutely futile.

He then turns his attention to some other possibility, which, however remote its chance for success, still offers the only hope. To sum up, a defender's second lead is based on judgment and reasoning—not on a previously memorized chart.

The bidding:

4 ♠	All Pass

Opening lead: King of diamonds

Today Mr. Dale led the king of diamonds. I believe Mr. Muzzy would have made the same choice. It was routine.

Mr. Champion flashed the nine and Mr. Dale continued with the ace and a third diamond. Winning the third trick with the queen, Mr. Champion paused to think.

For his jump bid in spades, Mr. Muzzy must have a six-card suit. He had already shown three diamonds, leaving him four cards in the other two suits. With two aces and a king in those suits in dummy, surely there were no winners for the defenders there.

Therefore if there was another trick for the defens it would have to be a spade.

At trick four Mr. Champion led the 13th diamond and that was the killer. If Mr. Muzzy ruffed low or discarded, Mr. Dale would win with the nine of spades. If he ruffed high (with the queen or jack), he could not avoid the loss of a trump trick to Mr. Champion.

Gillnetter "borrowed" for chase

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP)—John L. Robertson, 27-year-old Indian who gained prominence in June when he was credited with saving the life of a wounded RCMP constable, was acquitted Thursday of a charge of theft of a $13,000 gillnet fishing boat.

Magistrate George Cassidy, in finding Robertson innocent of the charge, said there was no proof of theft.

Gerald Miller, 19, of Langley, said he had Robertson's girl friend on his boat when Robertson chased them in a gillnetter owned by Richard L. Erickson of Delta.

Erickson said he thought Robertson had only "borrowed" the $13,000 boat, and blamed himself.

He said he had sawed off the lock on the cabin himself to get in the previous day, and had left the vessel with the lights and radio on while he went to a beer parlor.

Erickson said: "It is impossible to steal a gillnetter. You could not get away with it for two days."

Robertson saved the life of Constable John Clark when he drove him to hospital here after he had been shot through the heart on the Coquitlam Indian Reserve.

Snowfall! helps curb B.C. blaze

VANCOUVER (CP) — Snowfall has helped curb a British Columbia forest fire.

The forestry service said Tuesday light snow fell on two fires 2,000 feet up the mountains at the head of Bute Inlet, about 125 miles north of Vancouver.

The freak light snowfall was part of a general dampening trend in the weather through most of the province, which until Monday had gone 29 days without measurable rain—the longest dry spell here since 1951.

Mariners asked to avoid buoy

District Marine Agent N. A. Beketov has appealed to mariners to avoid passing too close to or disturbing unduly a newly placed buoy of the Canadian Hydrographic Service Tidal Division.

The buoy, a yellow-float type, grees true, from Addenbrooke Island light, latitude 51 degrees, 31 minutes, 55 seconds; longtitude 127 degrees, 51 minutes, 53 seconds on Chart 3727.

It shows a fixed white light and is fitted with radar reflector. It will be in position until September 4.
