
B.C. has only 22 seats out of 265 in Ottawa

Let's fill them with people who will speak strongly for B.C.

In the House of Commons, in Ottawa, vital decisions are made which affect every Canadian. Decisions about jobs . . . about money . . . decisions about your family's security and future. But in the House of Commons, British Columbia has only 22 seats out of 265. That means a small minority must speak out and fight for the things that will keep British Columbia moving ahead. Yet how often in the last four years have you heard strong voices raised on your behalf? Now's the time for a change. Our Province is unique. It's great potential must be developed. Our story must be told in Ottawa if we are to prosper! In British Columbia we have proof of Social Credit's ability to get things done. We'll get more things done for B.C. with Social Credit Members of Parliament.

Dramatic evidence of the continuing unfair treatment British Columbia has received from Liberals and Conservatives in Ottawa: in 1961, Federal Government tax revenue collections from British Columbia amounted to $597,600,000, but that Government's total expenditures in the Province were only $143,600,000; the excess of the Federal Government's collections over expenditures was $454,000,000!
