Ex-convict granted teaching certificate

SEATTLE (AP)—"I didn't spend years working toward a teaching goal just to go back to digging ditches," said Dean Bay an ex-convict.

Friday, State School superintendent Louis Bruno gave Bay an opportunity to do something else to support his wife and five children. He granted the 32-year-old Bay a three-year provisional teaching certificate.

Eight years ago, Bay was a night policeman in Goldendale, Wash. He was convicted of a series of thefts, served 18 months in the state reformatory and was paroled.

He then graduated from Eastern Oregon College of Education at his hometown of La Grande, taught on a temporary certificate at a Weston, Ore., elementary school and became a lay Baptist minister. Weston school officials, the chamber of commerce at La Grande and Washington State parole officials supported his application for a permanent certificate.

Oregon turned him down.

ACCEPTED AS TEACHER

Last month, Bay was accepted as a seventh-grade teacher in the private King's Garden School in Seattle while he waited to see if Washington State would let him continue. Now that he has the certificate, he'll go on teaching at King's Garden.

"I don't feel that anything in my record would jeopardize a child," Bay said. "Teaching is a profession and must have standards. But the fact a teacher has a record is not the important thing—it's the individual teacher who should be judged.

"I've paid for my mistake," he said.

"There is no advantage in having a program of rehabilitation if in the ultimate end the rehabilitated are not permitted to do anything but dig ditches."

The small wild ox, anoa, is found only in the Celebes islands of eastern Indonesia.

Merman hit in filmland with "Gypsy" road show

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP)—Ethel Merman made her Los Angeles debut at the Biltmore Theatre last week. She's a hit!

Miss Merman, who sings loudly with feet planted apart, is touring the provinces in "Gypsy," and she could probably continue as long as her energy holds out.

There was wonderment over how anyone but Merman could play the film version. None but Warner Brothers can understand the casting of Rosalind Russell. It's true that Roz is an international name while Merman isn't, but how is Roz going to belt out those songs?

Industry leaders met this week to kick off the 20th Permanent Charities drive, aiming to raise $1,000,000 from moive workers for community services. The campaign got a fast start with a $55,000 donation from Samuel Goldwyn, founder of the drive.

Preview: "Bridge to the Sun" is an arresting study of a West-East romance caught amid the conflict of nations. A sort of reverse "Madame Butterfly," the real-life story portrays Carroll Baker as a Tennessee girl who weds James Shigeta, a Japanese diplomat. They are faced by hate from countrymen on both sides after Pearl Harbor and suffer through the war after deportation to Japan.

Both stars play their roles with convincing intensiyt. The film somehow misses greatness, perhaps because it tries to cover too much ground and too much history.

"Splendor in the Grass" is a collaboration of Elia Kazan and William Inge and reflects the merits and limitations of both.

It is an important movie and bound to be a leading contender in next year's Oscar derby. It provides the emergence of Natalie Wood as a top actress and introduces Warren Beatty, an important new actor.

Miss Wood, Beatty and the rest of an excellent cast are the pawns of Kazan and Inge.

No director is better than Kazan at transforming the complexities of modern life into dramatic form. When he fails, it is because his characters become harsh and bloodless, as they sometimes do in "Splendor."

SELDOM MISSES

Inge seldom misses — four hits out of five tries on Broadway. But his backward view of small-town life on the plains seems limited.

"Splendor" is an arresting study of an ancient problem, sex before marriage. It has highly charged and shocking scenes and a love story that is engrossing, though more bitter than sweet.

Parents may quarrel with the picture's theme: Natalie's chastity makes her lose Beatty and her mind as well. It is not for children.
