Two for the Seesaw lacks quality, remains love story about real people

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — On the stage, "Two for the Seesaw" was a duet for actor and actress written by a poet of rare insight, William Gibson.

As written for the screen by Isobel Lennart, "Two for the Seesaw" lacks some of its original poetic quality. But it remains a remarkably human love story about real people, and you don't find many such vehicles nowadays.

Robert Wise, a Wincester, Ind., boy with a sure ear for the New York idiom "West Side Story," faced some problems in directing Seesaw.

The stage version had been played in two shabby apartments, side by side. The entire original cast consisted of Anne Bancroft as the warm-hearted Gittel Mosca, and Henr Fonda as Jerry Ryan, the displaced Omaha lawyer.

Obviosuly two players could not occupy the entire running time on a panavision screen. The locales were broadened, but the major part of the story is still played in the two partments, his and hers.

MACLAINE MARVELLOUS

As another concession to the screen, Gittel is a bit less Bronxian and Jerry somewhat less square than in the original. But both are enormously appealing as faultlessly played by Shirley MacLaine and Robert Mitchum.

MacLaine is marvellous, as expected. A bit of a kook herself, she fitted perfectly into Gittel's black tights. She is forever the doormat, accustomed to having men take advantage of her generosity and surprised when one comes along to castigate her for it.

It is a standout performance, certain to lure another Oscar nomination for the actress. Her ever-moving face is a joy to watch, and she is blessed with some of the brightest dialogue since "Born Yesterday."

The casting of Robert Mitchum was more adventurous. He has not been noted as an actor of sensitivity, largely because he seldom has had a chance with sensitive roles. In "Seesaw" he gives new ammunition to that tidy band of rooters who have been saying for years that Mitchum is Hollywood's most underrated actor.

Note to parents: this is adult entertainment.

U.S. fishermen forced out by foreigners

SEATTLE (AP) — A fisheries official says Soviet and Japanese fishing fleets will take 16 times as many bottom fish from the North Pacific this year as the U.S. fleet along the entire Pacific Coast.

E. K. Holmberg of the Washington State Fisheries department, told the Pacific Marine Fisheries Commission Wednesday the Russian and Japanese catches will total two million pounds.

"We can foresee the Russian fleet eventually moving down along Vancouver Island and the Washington Coast due to the abundance of ocean perch in those areas," Holmberg said.

"Since this is a prime species sought after by the Russians, and since the abundance of ocean perch off our coast is many times that of the Gulf of Alaska, this is a reasonable conclusion."

Delegates from Washington, Oregon and California attended the opening of the commission's three-day meeting. Observers were present from Alaska and Canada.
