East pulled off a neat deception maneuver today to defeat a three no trump contract that was, on the surface, unbeatable. A casual survey reveals that declarer has 10 cashable tricks. How a mirage of sorts reduced these 10 to seven is the basis of this tale.

For want of anything better, West opened the queen of diamonds, which was taken by dummy's ace. A club was led to the ten and West won with the queen. West continued with the jack of diamonds, which was permitted to hold, and now he shifted to the eight of spades.

East's jack forced the king and declarer led the jack of hearts, taken by West's ace. West returned the spade deuce, to suggest that he originally started with a doubleton, and South played the ace from dummy and led another club.

At this point East made the key play of the deal when he put up the king of clubs. His theory was, "Declarer intends to finesse for the king anyway, so I will be revealing nothing by playing it. But he does not know my distribution which I will try to conceal from him."

From declarer's standpoint, East's play of the king of clubs on the second lead of that suit marked West with the 9-7 of clubs, and the hand could be won only by projecting an end play against West.

So he cashed the king of diamonds, on which West discarded a heart, and then he played king, queen, and another heart, throwing West in for the projected end play in clubs. But West produced the seven to take the balance of the tricks.

TIME AND PLACE

went on a land clearing job on Vancouver Island. I can't but think that the folks in that part of British Columbia also heard a lot of the State of West Virginia and the famous Coal and Coke Railway.

A young man working on his party, earning money to put himself through university, eventually turned up at Hazelton as Dr. Stone. He afterwards moved to Vanderhoof where he spent his life as the local doctor.

Another fellow I remember on the party, working as axeman, was named Thurlow and was a graduate of Cambridge University and spent the rest of his life as a section hand on the railway and died at Topley a few years ago. He was an authority on mathematics and was often consulted by the engineering staff of the railway company. Thurlow was a perfect gentleman — he had everything but ambition.
