BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Trumping partner's ace is supposed to be the classic bonehead play of bridge. But consider today's hand, which offers further proof of the futility of using words like "never" and "always" in connection with the play of the cards.

If Mr. Masters had subscribed to the "never trump your partner's ace" theory, he would not have defeated today's contract of four hearts.

You will see that he not only committed this supposed bridge crime but also compounded the felony by ruffing with the ace of trumps.

As usual in close situations of this kind, time was of paramount importance. Mr. Masters could hardly have lost a card like the ace of trumps, but the point was that he had to use it at exactly the right time in an effort to build a later winner for his partner.

Mr. Masters

Mr. Masters played the eight spot in an effort to suggest that his partner go ahead and cash whatever club winners he had.

Next came the queen of clubs and when this held Mr. Dale gave a lot of thought to his next play. Finally he led the ace of clubs.

It did not take Mr. Masters long to see what his partner was driving at. Obviously Mr. Champion could ruff the ace of clubs. Dummy's clubs would then be set up and there were no less than three quick entries to the board.

The defenders were going to get a third trick in the ace of trumps, but where was the setting trick coming from? Clearly not from spades or diamonds as losers in those suits, if any, could be discarded on the long clubs.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♥	Pass
2 ♣	Pass	3 ♥	Pass
4 ♥	All Pass

Opening lead: King of clubs.

Therefore, a fourth trick, if it was possible to get it, must come from the trump suit itself.

Mr. Masters saw the importance of preventing declarer from gaining the lead here at trick three. If Mr. Champion got in, he could go to the board with a diamond or a spade and return a trump.

He would still have a guess as to the winning play in the trump suit but at least it would be possible for him to guess right and make his contract.

So Mr. Masters ruffed his partner's ace of trumps and after that, no amount of good guessing on Mr. Champion's part could avoid losing another trump to Mr. Dale's guarded queen.
