The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♦	1 ♠	2 ♣	4 ♠
5 ♣	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Deuce of ♠

Declarer was careful to examine all the evidence in today's hand before he made his decision on how to play the diamond suit. His patience was ultimately rewarded by a correct reading of the adverse holdings.

The first round of bidding was reasonable tho perhaps a word is in order concerning West's preëmptive jump to four spades. This action may appear quite drastic at first blush, with only four high card points. However, East's overcall should be based on a good suit, so that the void in clubs plus four trumps offers attractive trick taking potential. If the balance of strength is with the opposition as appears probable, then the jump may inhibit their efforts to get together, and the penalty if four spades meets with a double should not be excessive. In fact, it is our opinion that West should have given strong consideration to bidding five spades when next it was his turn. The damages could not have exceeded 300 points at the very outside.

Against five clubs, West opened his fourth best spade, and South put in the nine from dummy to see what this would fetch from East. The latter's queen was taken by the ace, and a club was led to dummy in order to return the jack of spades. East covered with the king and declarer ruffed. Another club to the ace drew the remaining trump and the king of hearts was led next. East was in with the ace, and he exited with a spade which South ruffed.

The information declarer had so far acquired revealed that East held the king, queen of spades and the ace of hearts. This made it highly unlikely that he could also have the ace of diamonds, for with this card in addition to the others, he would probably have made an informatory double originally, and he would assuredly have doubled the final bid of five clubs to discourage partner from taking a further sacrifice.

On the basis of the evidence, declarer might reasonably have decided to play West for both the ace and queen of diamonds, but instead he chose to play for split honors hoping that East had the queen singly guarded. On this supposition he cashed the remaining high heart to complete the stripping out process and then he returned to his hand with a trump to lead a diamond. West played low and declarer went right up with the king from dummy. A diamond was returned and East was in with the queen. Whether he returned a heart or a spade, South was able to shed his remaining diamond while he ruffed in dummy.
