BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

"A loser is a loser," said Mr. Muzzy petulantly, after he lost today's contract. "What difference does it make which loser I discard first?"

"On this hand it makes one trick difference," replied Mr. Abel impatiently, "and while that doesn't sound like much, it means you would have made the hand instead of going down one."

This exchange stemmed from the following play. Mrs. Keen opened the five of hearts and Mr. Muzzy was delighted that he was in a position to take the heart finesse without any risk whatsoever. He played the jack from dummy and ruffed when the king came up on his right.

Now he led the king of diamonds and Mr. Meek won with the ace and returned the suit. Mr. Muzzy took the second lead of diamonds with the queen and led a third round of the suit to dummy's nine.

Mr. Muzzy

Next he cashed dummy's ace and queen of hearts, discarding the ten of spades and a small club from his hand. It was all up to the club suit now. He played the ace and another club, but when Mrs. Keen showed up with the king and the jack, he was down one.

This type of faulty discarding is not an uncommon error. In discarding from two suits it seems natural to choose first the suit where it is possible to get rid of all losers—as was the case in the spade suit in this hand.

Actually, there was no need to get rid of the 10 of spades immediately because the ace controlled the suit.

Suppose Mr. Muzzy had bided his time and played as follows:

At trick one, ruff the king of hearts with the 10 of diamonds. Lead the eight of diamonds and play dummy's nine. It would make no real difference in the final result whether Mr. Meek took the ace of diamonds here or not. So say he wins with the ace and returns a diamond. Play the six from the closed hand and win with dummy's seven.

Cash dummy's two good hearts and discard two clubs. Then lead a low club and play the queen. Mrs. Keen would win with the king and would have no better return than a club. Win this with the ace in dummy, return another club and ruff it high.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♦	Pass
1 NT	Pass	5 ♦	All Pass

Opening lead: Five of hearts.

This would set up a good club on the board which could be reached with a trump lead to the five. On this club the 10 of spades could be discarded.

Mr. Muzzy would lose only a diamond and a club.
