Opening lead: King of ♠

The Vanderbilt Team-of-Four Championship recently concluded at the Spring Nationals in Lexington, Ky., produced a stunning upset when an unseated team from St. Louis led by Jerry Leavitt emerged as the winner. After enacting the role of giant killer in the earlier rounds, Leavitt's aggregate edged out my own team and that of Sam Stayman in the final round robin.

A hand that contributed to our second place finish is presented today. My teammates, Boris Koytchou and Harold Ogust, uncovered a profitable sacrifice against a vulnerable slam which their opponents had bid.

East opened the bidding with one diamond and West elected to respond with one spade. Koytchou, seated North, made a strategic take-out double. With favorable vulnerability, it was his purpose to investigate, at the lower levels, the prospects for a save. East ignored the double and raised his partner's spades. West now probed for further information by showing the ace of hearts. Koytchou repeated his double and East bid four diamonds.

Reassured as to the solidity of the diamond suit, West embarked on a Blackwood inquiry. When East announced possession of two aces by responding with five hearts, Ogust, seated South, entered the proceedings with a double. Despite the fact that his holding was distinctly anemic, he realized that his values in clubs and hearts represented a good fit for partner and it was his intention to encourage a sacrifice against the ultimate slam bid.

When West proceeded to six spades, North bid six no trump, a bid which obviously couldn't mean what it suggested. Instead, it suggests to partner that he select one of the remaining two suits. South obliged by bidding seven hearts and West's double closed the auction. In the play, the defense took two hearts, one spade, and one diamond to administer a 700 point set. At the other table, my team held the East-West hands, and they reached a six spade contract with little interference from the opposition. The contract was fulfilled without difficulty, and the trick score of 1,430 points produced a net gain of 730 on the deal to our forces.

Villages flooded

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP)—Flood waters caused by ice jams swirled through two Alaska villages Monday but no casualties were reported.

Thirty-seven of the 244 residents of Aniak, on the Kuskokwim River 300 miles southwest of here, have been evacuated downstream to Bethel and housed in a national guard armory. The Kuskokwim poured into the village Saturday.

About 25 per cent of the inhabitants of Fort Yukon, 100 miles northeast of here on the Yukon River, were evacuated from riverside homes. The Yukon flooded a large part of the town to a depth of one foot Sunday.
