BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

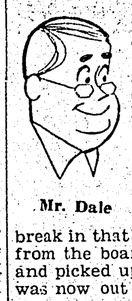
By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Whenever it is necessary to lose the lead, or to take a chance of losing it (as in the case of a finesse), it is always advisable to try to strip the opponents' hands of safe returns first.

The idea is to give the enemy the lead at a time when anything they return will be to your advantage. Of course, it is not always possible to arrange this perfect state of affairs, but that shouldn't keep you from trying.

Mr. Dale consistently practices this advice and he followed it in today's hand to bring home a dubious four-heart contract, reached through Miss Brash's aggressive bidding.

Mr. Abel won the first trick with the king of spades, noted his partner's play of the encouraging eight spot and followed with the ace and a third round of the suit. Mr. Dale ruffed the third spade and laid down the ace of hearts.



Mr. Dale

A small heart to dummy's king showed up the bad break in that suit. He led a heart from the board, finessed the ten and picked up the jack. But he was now out of trumps himself.

Mr. Abel had to make three discards on the heart leads. He threw his last spades and a club. Mr. Dale noted that this accounted for all of the spades.

He now led three rounds of clubs, ending in his own hand. When everybody followed suit, the clubs were accounted for—including the one Mr. Abel had foolishly ruffed. Having carefully watched the fall of the cards, Mr. Dale knew that unless he was playing with a faulty deck, Mrs. Keen had nothing left but diamonds.

He led the seven of diamonds and let it ride. Mrs. Keen was in with the ten and had to lead back into dummy's ace-queen.

Mr. Dale probably would have made this hand regardless of the opponent's discarding, but it is significant to consider that he would have lost it if he had not stripped out the clubs before surrendering the lead.

In that case Mrs. Keen, after winning with the ten of diamonds, would simply return a club without damage to her side. Then Mr. Dale would have had to take a second diamond finesse. That would have lost to the king for a one-trick set.
