Opening lead: King of ♦

Declarer managed his assets with great skill in seizing on the only distribution that could give him a chance to make his contract in today's hand.

West opened the king of diamonds against four hearts, and East signalled encouragingly with the six. The queen of diamonds was continued and East completed the echo by playing the deuce. A third round of the suit was ruffed in the closed hand and declarer paused to contemplate his prospects.

Even if the trumps broke well, one trick would have to be conceded there, and a club loser also appeared to be unavoidable. South was reluctant to abandon hope altogether and he searched his mind for some distribution which would give him a chance. Presently, he saw that, if West held specifically the king and one heart as well as the king of clubs, it might be possible to eliminate the club loser thru an end play.

As the first step in his campaign, declarer cashed the ace of hearts in order to remove the small trump from West's hand. He then played three high spades to strip his opponent of all same means of exit later on. Fortunately for South, the spade suit broke. A small trump was led throwing West into the lead with the king of hearts. He was obliged to return a club, and the queen was played from dummy. When this held the trick, declarer drew East's jack of trumps and claimed his contract.

The defenders had two opportunities on the hand. If West, at trick two, leads a small diamond rather than the queen, East will be in with the ace and has the opportunity to shift to a club in order to relieve his partner of the humiliation of a subsequent end play.

The second chance occurred when South cashed the ace of trumps. Had West jettisoned his king, relying on his partner to hold the protected jack of hearts, declarer would have been unable to throw West in at the crucial moment.
