BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Mr. Masters knows the importance of the time element in bridge. Using this knowledge he reduced his possible losers in this hand from four to two, thus making five-odd at spades instead of going set a trick.

Mr. Dale opened the queen of diamonds which was taken on the board with the ace. Preparing the hand for a possible throw-in play, Mr. Masters immediately led another diamond and ruffed it in his hand.

Then he laid down the ace of spades and got the bad news that he was going to lose a trump trick, when Mr. Champion discarded a small diamond. In addition, he had a possible heart loser and two possible losers in clubs.

Mr. Masters

At the fourth trick he led the six of hearts to dummy's ace. This was the last time he could be in dummy without losing the lead. He could take finesses in clubs or hearts. He did neither.

He planned to put Mr. Dale in with a third round of spades. But to get the maximum advantage from that play, he had to make it at the right time.

Therefore, at trick five he led dummy's last diamond and ruffed it. Then he cashed the king of spades and followed with a small spade.

Mr. Dale won with the queen—and any return he chose to make was suicide. If he led a diamond Mr. Masters could ruff in one hand while discarding a loser from the other.

A club lead would give up the chance of winning two tricks with the king and queen of that suit. Mr. Dale figured the ace of clubs was on his right but his partner might have the king or jack of hearts.

So he returned a heart, which went into Mr. Masters' king-jack.

After cashing those two cards Mr. Masters led a low club. Mr. Dale was end-played again. He won with the queen and his club return gave Mr. Masters the rest of the tricks. Note that the result would not have been as good on this hand if all of dummy's diamonds had not been ruffed out before Mr. Dale was thrown in on the third round of spades. Stripping the diamonds from both closed hand and dummy robbed Mr. Dale of his last safe return.
