BRINGING UP FATHER

By George McManus

Archbishop Du Vernet's Charge to His Diocese.

Archbishop Du Vernet's charge to the Anglican Synod of the Diocese of Caledonia, which opened here this morning was as follows:—

What is the outlook for religion in Northern British Columbia? The answer to this question depends upon what we mean by religion. If we adopt the traditional view of religion the outlook is most discouraging. There is in this far west and mountainous country much less external religion than there is in the East. There is not the same regard for Sunday. There is not the same attendance at church. There is not the same respect for the minister as a minister. There is not the same reading of the Bible. There are not the same meetings for prayer. All this has a depressing effect upon a clergyman fresh from some well organized parish in Eastern Canada or England. We must, however, be on our guard against identifying conventional religion with essential religion. Conventional religion is the proper observance of religious customs. Essential religion is the life of God in the souls of men.

Spirit of Religion.

The lonely prospector on the hills is often conscious of the presence of God. The sturdy pioneer far from any church building has often his quiet moments when he comes into touch with the Infinite. The Spirit of Christ is above everything else the spirit of fellowship. We find among the men of the west not only many unmistakable signs of fellowship with God but also many indisputable proofs of fellowship with brother men to those in difficulty, trouble, or sorrow, in this land of the west is of the very essence of the religion of Christ.

The type of men we meet in the west throws a tremendous responsibility upon us who are western ministers of the Gospel to meet reality with realiy. Religious customs and ceremonies always tend to outlive their usefulness. We need to revitalize our Church services and reinterpret our Church formulas. Many of these formulas are expressed in the theological phraseology of a by-gone age under the influence of scholastic philosophy. The philosophy of the Middle Ages was based upon science. Scientific philosophy teaches us that we must first rise to the conception of the Universal through the study of Particulars, and that then we must revalue these Particulars in the light of this conception of the Universal. This gives us the new outlook in business, society, morality and religion. It is because the new outlook is so much broader than the old outlook that the future is so full of hope.

The old view led us to concentrate our attention to exclusively upon the particular part. Now while we still do justice to this particular part we take care to co-ordinate it with other equally essential parts, and we revalue this particular part in terms of the comprehensive whole. Let me indicate what I mean. The salvation of the individual does not occupy now the whole of our preaching, because the wider vision has made us see more clearly that the individual can only be saved as he si properly related not only to God but also to society. In other words we are getting back to the two-fold fundamental principle taught by Christ—love to God and love to our fellow-men. To take one more example of the new outlook:—Our particular Church or religious denomination, does not bulk so large now in our mind as formerly, because the wider vision has made us see that we can only value our own Church aright as we realize how it is related to the Universal Church, and so properly co-ordinated with all other branches of the Church of Christ.

Meeting Modern Needs.

It is the spirit of the recent Lambeth Appeal to all Christian people which is so inspiring. The language of this appeal is too cramped to do justice to the great cause. The Spirit of God working through the living Church has full authority to create new forms of organization better adapted to meet modern needs. There was a time when we firmly believed that the electric current must follow the line of the metallic wire. Now we know by practical demonstration that the electric wave can leap through space quite independently of this wire. The old system has not been superceded for it is still more reliable, but by the side of the old system we have now made room for the new systen of wireless telegraphy.

For fifteen hundred years the spirit of God as the Divine Administrator of the Church made use of the Episcopal Line of succession in the transmitting of the authority of the Church. This is strong presumptive evidence in its favor. But for the last five hundred years the same Spirit of God has abundantly demonstrated that His Power is not tied to this Episcopal Line of succession, but overleaps the bounds of such narrow limitation. The old system of the Historic Episcopate must not be abandoned for it is still effective, but by the side of this we must make room for other systems of ecclesiastical order which have proved their worth.

The principle of historic continuity is essential but when the Spirit of Him Who is the same "Yesterday, today and forever" is manifestly working through the organism of some Church we have the highest guarantee of this essential continuity.

Loyalty in Religion.

Loyalty to our Church traditions forces us to hold fast to the historic Episcopate, but loyalty to the Spirit of Christ will not allow us to erect this piece of ecclesiastical machinery as a barrier in the way of Christian Fellowship.

Social contact is the great solvent for religious prejudice. Let men of the different Churches come together for common worship and common work for the
