The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1 ♣	Double	Pass	1 NT
Pass	2 NT	Pass	3 NT
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Three of ♡

The "too hasty play to trick one" is an oft voiced criticism levied by bridge writers in their columns against the poor declarer. Altho this charge is usually well placed we have decided to give the customary victim a rest, and in today's hand it is the defender who will be taken to task for his impulsiveness.

The bidding was sound. South did not bother to show his diamond suit in response to partner's takeout double. The one no trump response is a completely descriptive call—showing from about 8 to 10 points—and is more apt to lead to a game.

West gave considerable thought to his opening lead. From the bidding it appeared that his opponents were pretty well fortified in clubs. It seemed to him, then, that the best hope was to hit his partner's suit and, since his side strength was located primarily in hearts, he focused his attack in this direction by opening the three of hearts. But for his partner's lack of cooperation, this would have been a killing defense.

The jack was played from the dummy and East, without a moment's consideration, covered with his queen which held the trick. A heart was returned to West's ace and a third round cleared the suit as South won the trick with the ten. Declarer proceeded to drive out the king of diamonds, but since West was out of hearts he was unable to reach his partner, and South was able to run off with nine tricks.

The minute East put up his queen of hearts, he retired himself permanently from the play. Observe the effect, if he permits the jack to hold the first trick and contents himself with an encouraging signal by playing the nine of hearts. Now, when West gets in with the diamond king, his ace of hearts will drop the king and another heart to East's queen will permit the latter to run two more tricks in the suit.

The play of the nine can hardly lose. If West has four hearts, then declarer's remaining cards in the suit will drop on the next round. What if South doesn't have the ten of hearts? Well, in that instance he would surely play the opening bidder for the missing ace, and on the first trick declarer would put up the king from the dummy.
