PROCESS FOR MAKING AIRPLANES INVISIBLE

Hull, England, Man Claims He Has Discovered Secret, But Science is Skeptical.

LONDON, Dec. 29.—Mr. Ernest Welsh, of North Ferriby, near Hull, claims to have discovered a metal with the transparent properties of glass, by which aeroplanes can be rendered invisible.

Mr. Welsh is a man of inventive ideas. During the war he experimented with a pocket-like apparatus to bring down zeppelins, submarine signals and silent guns have received his attention, and he has placed on the market a device for the improved lighting for ships and a system for gassing rats.

Scepticism is expressed by London scientists upon the reported claim by Mr. Welsh.

Dr. Rosenhain, of the National Physical Laboratory, a well-known authority on glass and steel, said that it was not possible to make any metal transparent, nor had great success been achieved in making glass strong enough to resist fracture.

Light Through Gold.

Mr. Shaw Scott, of the Institute of Metals, said the essential of a metal was its opaque character. "The only method in which any metal has been made at all transparent has been by beating," he said.

"We have pieces of metal at the Institute, notably gold, beaten out to such ultra-microscopical thinness that it shows a certain amount of translucency, a greenish light being able to pass through it.

"This was only an experiment into the ductility of the metal," he added. "It is possible to get silver and aluminum down to this fineness, but it is of no special constructive use."

Mr. Welsh has, apparently, not submitted his invention to the research department of the Air Ministry.

An official of the Department said that certain forms of camouflage and the use of highly polished aluminum were very successful in making an aeroplane invisible.
