BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE
By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Many a contract is lost because declarer is apparently determined to do all the work himself and thus fails to enlist the valuable aid of his opponent.

Such a situation arose in today's deal in which Mr. Muzzy was trying to make four spades. The opening heart lead was taken on his right with the ace and the king of clubs was returned. He won with dummy's ace, cashed two rounds of trumps and the king and queen of hearts.

Up to this point he could not have done better. But now he laid his cards face down on the table and went into deep thought. "I've got to do a little card-reading," he announced. He ignored a derisive snort from Mr. Champion who was sitting behind him.

Mr. Muzzy

Here was his problem, as he saw it. He was trying to figure out how to avoid the loss of two tricks in diamonds.

As you see, he could finesse either way against the jack. If he lost a trick to the jack he would lose his contract, because he had already lost a heart and was certain to lose a club trick and the ace of diamonds.

After giving the situation a thorough and prolonged "reading" he led the trey of diamonds.

When the deuce appeared on his left he elected to finesse dummy's 10. Mr. Abel won with the jack and the defenders proceeded to cash a club and the ace of diamonds for a one-trick set.

"I never get a break," said Mr. Muzzy bitterly.

"You got two fine breaks but you didn't even see them, much less take advantage of them," said Mr. Champion severely.

"First you got a favorable opening lead and found the ace of hearts on your right. Next, the distribution of your hand and the dummy made a perfect setup for a trip and end-play.

"You want to do all the leading," Mr. Champion continued. "Why not let the opponents lead now and then? You were all right up to the point where you cashed the king and queen of hearts.

"After that, instead of beating your brains out about which way to finesse against the jack of diamonds, why not just lead a club? Whoever won it would have no good return.

"If a diamond comes back, it takes the guess out of that suit. And if they return a club you just ruff in one hand and discard a diamond from the other. Either way, you couldn't have more than one diamond loser."
