Hope A Deceiver; Work A Regenerator.

"Hope is a liar" writes W. L. George, the novelist. And he is right. Hope is worse than that. Hope is a deliberate deceiver. Yet many of us hug the deceiver to our hearts and forget that he is false and that nothing but work really counts.

The person who hopes that something is going to turn up and does not set out to turn it up is in a parlous way. Hope is the last person he would entertain under those circumstances. Despair should be his companion.

There are a few people we call lucky who have riches and honors thrust upon them. They may be lucky, but they have not had the extreme pleasure of achievement, the joy which comes from work well done. While we say they are lucky they have been deprived by fate of the very thing which counts in this world and which can give them any real enjoyment.

Hard work directed by brains brings success. That is an axiom that is always true. It depends upon how much effort you put into the work and how much brain you develop in directing it. It is impossible to develop the brain without work and it is useless to work without developing the brain at the same time. The brain is the directing agency and must be used whether you are shovelling snow or writing a poem. In either case there has to be well directed effort if the results are to be satisfactory.

The Low Down Man Who Pleases Everybody.

Another thing that Mr. George says is that it is a low down thing to try to please everybody. He is a writer and a writer has to sell his goods to the public much as a grocer does. If there is no demand for his wares, he finds that the landlady becomes less friendly and eventually he is shown the door. Here is what this particular writer says:

"The man who writes only what the public wants is as low a man as the druggist who supplies cocaine to the public that wants it. I have never written a line which I cannot justify today; I might have had an easier time if I had been less idealistic about it. I may have changed my views; at thirty-nine I do not think as I did at twenty-five; but what I said at twenty-five I honestly believed then. There is no other way to keep one's heart clean and one's pocket filled; a man can no more prosper through writings which he despises than a salesman can sell stoves unless he believes that they are good stoves. For a while the fraud may stand, but in the end the writings and the stoves find liars out."

What About Selling City Of Prince Rupert?

What about selling the city? As a community we have the city for sale and we are looking for a purchaser. We want to interest people in this locality and get them to come here and develop our resources, open factories, operate saw mills or pulp plants, develop the power now going to waste, cure the fish and develop markets for it. The goods we have to offer are the natural resources and often we put them in the back shed or in the basement instead of placing them plainly before the people who are likely to prove purchasers.

Possibly one of the lines of goods that will some day be more in demand than any other is our power. The humidity of our atmosphere is going to be one of our sources of wealth. Nature has provided this. There are all sorts of dormant possibilities in the water powers of this district and the time will come when they will be developed.

What shall we do? Just hope?

Unfortunately hope is not a marketable commodity. It is not in demand among those who turn the wheels of industry. We shall never get anywhere by just sitting back and hoping that some day somebody will come along and develop the latent powers and make us all rich. Hope is a base deceiver. The communities that have prospered have usually been those where the inhabitants have been alive to the possibilities and have taken steps to sell them to the world.

Now and then men have stumbled across a gold mine and become rich in spite of themselves. Such cases are very few, so few as to be negligible. Well directed effort is what counts. It counts in developing a business or in building a city. Hope is a liar. Don't listen to him.

"I Was Terribly Weak After Baby Was Born"

Mrs. H. McClure, Norwood, Ont., writes:

"After my baby was born, I was terribly weak and run down, with pains across my back. I had heard so much of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food that I decided to try it. Three boxes proved enough to make me quite strong and well again. I also used Dr. Chase's Ointment for a rash which broke out on the baby, and the rash disappeared completely in a short time."

ROTARIANS GET ENCOURAGEMENT

Minister of Lands Urges Courage and Optimism For City and Province

MUCH PROGRESS ALREADY

More Confidence in Future Today Than on Day he Came Here, Says Pattullo

"Today I have far more confidence in the future of Prince Rupert than I had the day I came here."

"The forces that are able to accelerate development are not all doing it. I suggest that you leave no stone unturned until you accomplish that which you think should be accomplished in Northern British Columbia. If you keep on fighting there is no doubt as to what the future will be."

Not only were practically all members of the Rotary Club in attendance at the luncheon yesterday to hear the address of Hon. T. D. Pattullo but nearly every member had with him a visitor so that the accommodation of the St. Regis club room was taxed near the limit. President T. H. Johnson occupied the chair and the visitors were well mixed with the members.

In his address Mr. Pattullo referred to the dull times through which the city and province had been passing. Shortly after the war there had been unemployment in the States. That condition had changed and some people were leaving Canada for that country. Building had started after the war and the building activity had brought great prosperity. On this side of the boundary line conditions had not been so good and as a result many of the young people had gone away just as they had on numerous other occasions. It was said at one time that in Chicago alone there were 250,000 Canadians.

Must Have Courage

For the remedy the first thing was to have courage, fight the fight of today and let the morrow take care of itself.

Mr. Pattullo said he had for a long time been keenly interested in immigration even when the idea was not as popular as it was today. He did not agree with the reasoning that we should not bring people into the country because there had been unemployment here. Canada's greatest prosperity was during the time when there was the greatest influx of new settlers. The very process created employment. He had made the statement that Canada could absorb 300,000 people a year. These immigrants would add to the number of consumers and would enlarge the market.

Telling of the Yukon when he was there 25 years ago, Mr. Pattullo said at that time there were 25,000 people there. This was a wonderful market for outside places and Seattle had been built up on that tradee. If they could get 300,000 healthy men with healthy minds who would pull their own weight when difficulties arose it would be a great benefit to the country. He told of new business starting up in British Columbia and the benefit it had been. How, he asked, could they build up the country without people? Yet there were people who still argued against immigration. What they wanted was healthy white people.

Immigration Policy

On his visits to the old country Mr. Pattullo said he had taken up with the imperial authorities this immigration question and later had laid his views before the Dominion government believing it was the duty of the Domnion to undertake an immigration policy. This had already borne fruit for Premier Oliver was even now at Ottawa discussing immigration with the Dominion government and he felt sure they would have a policy worked out soon. In a few weeks he expected to hear of a definite concrete proposal and there was no reason why it should not result in a great many people being brought to the country.

Some thought only those of Anglo-Saxon origin should be brought here, but he thought this a msitake. Immigrants should be trained on their arrival in Anglo-Saxon traditions and institutions and they would make good Canadians. He did not favor bringing older people. The young could assimilate quicker and tackle the problems of a new country better than the old. He would like to see a lot of them brought right in to Northern British Columbia.

Old Centre Street

While regretting that greater progress had not been made here Mr. Pattullo said he looked back a few years when Mr. Orme had his drug store in a tent on Centre Street and he saw great improvement since then. The railway lost its inspiration with Mr. Hays, and then came the war, then the railway got into difficulties and got into the hands of those who were not in sympathy with the people here. He thought the part from Jasper to Prince Rupert was the best part of the line and Northern British Columbia was the best part of Canada. He had been in every part of the province and knew what he was talking about. Today he had far more confidence in the future of Prince Rupert than the day he came here. He spoke of the fisheries, the mineral and timber wealth and the agricultural possibilities. Development of the stock industry would be a great benefit to the district. Dairying was one of the things that would make the interior prosperous. Switzerland supported three million cattle and British Columbia's grazing commissioner estimated that the Bulkley and Nechaco valleys would support as many as Switzerland.

Growth in 20 Years

There was no reason to be discouraged, the minister said. The population of the province had trebled in twenty years and there was reason for encouragement. The forces that could have accelerated development had not all been doing it. They should leave no stone unturned until they had accomplished that which they thought should be accomplished in Northern British Columbia. If they kept on fighting there was no doubt what the future would be.

OXFORD GRADUATE TAKES YEAR IN PEN.

Sent up For Appropriating Another's Victory Bonds

WINNIPEG, Jan. 25.— George C. G. Stenning, graduate of Oxford university and Westminster public school, was sentenced to serve one year in jail when he pleaded guilty before Magistrate Hugh John Macdonald in city police court to the theft of Victory bonds worth $2,000 from his former employers, the Winnipeg Social Welfare commission.

Stenning met his sentence four and one-half years after the crime for which he was brought to justice was committed.

A letter written by his wife as she lay dying in a sanitorium at Great Falls, Montana, where she was taken by her husband after the theft, containing a confession that her husband was guilty of taking the bonds, gave the police a clue which led to Stenning's arrest last September in Portland, Ore.

Waiving extradition after he had first started a legal fight to avoid coming back to Winnipeg for trial, Stenning left a second wife and one child in the American city. While he serves sentence of one year, four children left in Winnipeg when he fled with his first wife are in the care of the Children's Home, police said.

Four $500 Victory bonds were taken by Stenning, who had access to the vaults of the Social Welfare commission, between March and October, 1918. He left the city shortly after and the theft was not discovered until the audit was made in the spring of 1919. The clue afforded by the letter from his first wife led the police to investigations which finally disclosed his residence in Portland. One bond, which was sold prior to his departure from the city, was recovered. Restitution of the bond was ordered by the court.
