ZAZA IS STORY OF A BEAUTIFUL GIRL

Theatrical Star, Heroine of Play, Reaches Pinnacle of Fame

Zaza, the heroine of the picture play shown here this week end, is the star at "The Odeon," a cafe chantant at St. Etienne, near Paris. The Duke de Brissac showers her with costly presents and attentions, much to the delight of Rosa, aunt of the orphaned Zaza.

Florianne, a soubrette on the same bill, makes a play for Bernard Dufresne, a member of the French diplomatic corps, who is a frequent visitor at "The Odeon" just to get a look at the lovely Zaza, Florianne being extremely jealous.

On this particular night, Dufresne saves Zaza from the advances of a rough-neck. The girl is terribly upset at not seeing Dufresne after the incident and tells her manager, Rigault, that if he wishes her to sign any contract he will have to bring M'sieur Dufresne to her that night.

Before leaving for Paris, Dufresne stops at "The Odeon." Florianne, whose jealousy and rage has increased, cuts the rope of the swing Zaza uses in her act, and the girl plunges into the audience beyond the orchestra pit. Dufresne is first to her aid and as he holds her in his arms both realize a tremendous love. The doctor orders a complete rest so Zaza takes a cottage at the edge of town — a beutiful spot where she and Dufresne find that cupid makes a splendid healer.

Blissfully Happy

They are blissfully happy together until Madame Dufresne arrives from Paris to claim her place with her husband. Zaza goes into a frenzy when Florianne comes to the love nest and tells her that Dufresne has just left for America with a woman he called "my dear."

The realization that Dufresne is married stuns Zaza. She determines to go through with her plans, but the sight of Dufresne's little daughter, Yvonne, dissipates her desire for revenge. Zaza returns to her cottage heart-weary and dejected. Dufresne arriving a short time later to say good-bye. Zaza asks him if he is taking his wife and child with him. This puzzles Bernard, and he asks her what she means. In the scene that follows Zaza tells him that she has told his wife all—of their love—their kisses—and of many other things that never happened.

Wild With Rage

Dufresne is aghast at this. He is wild with rage. Zaza defies him. Then she becomes penitent and confesses that she has lied—that she did not tell his wife anything. At this Dufresne declares his love anew, and vows that he will get a divorce. Zaza insists that his first duty is to his wife and child and that he must go to America as he has planned. They part, but love remains in both hearts.

Years go by. Zaza reaches the pinnacle of fame in Paris. One night in the city Dufresne and his daughter, Yvonne, back from the States where Madame Dufresne had died, see the lovely Zaza again. Reconciliation follows, and Zaza's love nest in the country becomes a home.

WATER SYSTEM AT METLAKATLA

Engineers and Material Arrived from Vancouver on Yesterday's Steamer

James H. A. Stephen, engineer of the Dominion water power branch, and his assistant, James Gilbert, arrived in the city from Vancouver by the Prince George yesterday afternoon to supervise the completion of the water supply system which is being installed at Metlakatla Indian village. Considerable of the material for the job including wooden pipe for the main arrived yesterday. It is expected that three or four weeks will see the system in operation. Labor will be supplied by the natives themselves.

The source of the Metlakatla water supply will be a small lake about a mile back from the village. The main will be laid to a convenient centre in the village and from it laterals will be laid to supply each house.

The material is being taken over by scow to Metlakatla today. Indian Agent W. E. Collison accompanied the engineers across to the village.

It is hoped that a small hydro-electric plant for the supplying of light to each of the houses will also be put in at Metlakatla in the near future.

STABILIZING OF TURKEY MARKET

Demand This Year is Very Large and no Price Decline is Expected

Opening prices for Christmas turkeys will be announced shortly. Thanksgiving turkeys were well cleaned up in local stores 24 hours before closing on the eve of the holiday and it is estimated that the sales this year more than trebled any previous Thanksgiving business in the last ten years. Prices for Christmas stock will not suffer the big decline of a year ago, and it is expected to stabilize the prices at the beginning of the business and maintain them until the finish.

The Valencia orange season is nearly over and the new naval oranges are already on the southern markets. This line will not be popular for two or three weeks as they are generally quite green at this time of the year. Jap oranges have arrived and will be in big demand for the next four or five weeks.

Egg prices are still rising and butter shows a slight sharpening tendency. Otherwise there are few changes to be recorded on the local retail market.
