GIRL MARRIED ANOTHER GIRL

Ruth Bundy, Who For Seven Years Posed as Man Gets Out of Jail

THIRTY-THREE YEARS OLD

First Marriage When Seventeen Years of Age But Was Divorced Since

MARSHALLTOWN, Ia., Aug. 28—The final chapter of the sensational case of Ruth ("Walter") Bundy, who posed as a man for seven years, and married another woman, was written in Municipal Court here when Judge B. O. Tankersley, dismissed the charges against her after a brief hearing. A warrant charging her with threatening to commit a public offense had brought her arrest after the disclosure that Walter Bundy, "loafer" husband of Elizabeth West Bundy, young and pretty, was not a man. Miss Bundy departed with her relatives in an automobile for "Southern Illinois, near St. Louis," immediately after she was liberated.

So successful was Miss Bundy's masquerade during the seven years she wore men's clothing, that she worked with a railroad track crew and as a farm hand without detection. Even a physician who attended her during an illness several years ago failed to discover that his patient was not a man.

Lived Together

The most puzzling feature of the case, however, is furnished by Miss Bundy's marriage to Miss Elizabeth West, who is twenty-three years old. The ceremony was performed at Newton, Iowa, in October, 1921, and the women have lived together since. "Walter was a failure as a husband," according to resident of Rhodes, where the couple lived. The "husband" was regarded as a ne'er-do-well, having developed an aversion for work soon after the marriage, it is said. It has been learned that Miss West had $1,430 when the marriage was performed. This had all been spent during the jobless periods, and the "bride" was the object of the townspeoples' sympathy.

Until the court hearing commenced, Miss West insisted that "Walter" was a man. She suffered a nervous collapse while Miss Bundy was in jail and pleaded with her mother to permit her "husband" to return to her. Mrs. West did not let her daughter visit the jail, and reporters failed to secure permission to interview the "wife."

"We don't want this thing talked about before her," Mrs. West said. "She has suffered enough. We don't want 'Walter' to come here again, and we intend to keep them apart."

"Bride" is Staunch

At this time Miss West was declaring her belief that the disclosures were part of a plot to separate her from her husband.

Miss Bundy remained steadfast in her assertions that the "bride" had never learned she was married to a woman.

"My 'wife' did not know I was not a man," she declared. "My mother objected to my keeping company with 'Midge' (Miss West) from May, 1921, until our marriage in October of that year. She did not know when we were married. After she did not know, I think she and other relatives kept quiet about it, because they did not want to make me any trouble."

The masquerade was penetrated when Miss West's brother became suspicious and came to Rhodes from Des Moines to investigate. When confronted by him Miss Bundy brandished a hammer and threatened to kill him. During the ensuing scuffle her clothing was torn. West used the threat as the basis for his warrant.

Married Before

Miss Bundy admitted in jail that she had married Frank Arnold at Steelville, Mo., when she was seventeen years old. Arnold secured a divorce in Iowa, and she has no knowledge of his whereabouts.

The marriage of "Walter" Bundy and Elizabeth West is recorded in the license files at Newton, seat of Jasper County. "Walter" swore that this was "his first marriage.

The newlyweds lived on a truck farm near here for a while, but the work proved too strenuous for "Walter." Occasional periods of employment with a railroad track crew and as a farm hand followed. Members of section crews with whom she worked say they never suspected she was not a man. She always did her share of the work without complaint.

Began In 1917

Miss Bundy said she began wearing men's clothing permanently in May, 1917. Her family originally lived at East Alton, Ill., where she was born. Later they moved to St. Louis and subsequently to other Missouri points. She attended school until she reached the third grade; then her studies were discontinued because of ill health. Illness forced her to live in the open much of the time and overalls were her favorite garb.

After her father's death, six years ago, she came to Iowa with her mother and her brother. She worked in the harvest fields and plowed corn, always wearing men's clothing.

Wants a Pipe

"Judge," said the young woman, as she was being led from the court room when she was first arraigned, "is there any reason why a person who has smoked for twenty-five years should be denied tobacco?"

"Have you any money to buy tobacco?" asked the Court.

"No, not a cent," she said, "but I have my tobacco and a pipe."

"The jail isn't fireproof," said the sheriff, and Ruth was forced to abstain from tobacco during her incarceration.

Miss Bundy is thirty-three years old. She weighs little more than 100 pounds, but her slightness is the only indication of feminity. Her high-pitched voice has a masculine ring, and her head is closely cropped. She refused to discard her overalls in jail when she was offered woman's apparel.

"I never did like to wear woman's clothes, even when I was a child," she said.

DESERTERS ARE RETURNING TO FRANCE TODAY

Number Went Over to Enemy but General Amnesty Brings Them Back

PARIS, Aug. 28.—The amnesty bill just passed by the Chamber of Deputies is expected in some quarters to result in a general resurrection of French soldiers who had passed into history as "killed on the field of battle."

Already, though the senate has still to pass on the measure, deserters are crossing the frontiers and breathing the air of France for the first time in six years or more. One of them, a soldier named Robin, given up for dead after the battle of the Chemin des Dames in April, 1917, startled his brother, who keeps a wine shop in Paris, by suddenly appearing before him the other day.

Did Not Know Him

"You don't know me," remarked the deserter, who had grown a beard during his exile.

"No, I don't know you," was the reply.

"I am your brother," replied the deserter.

"My brother was killed at the Chemin des Dames," was the rejoinder.

"No," insisted the deserter, "there were not so many butchered as was supposed. A lot of them deserted to the enemy and I was among them. Now that the Chamber has passed the amnesty law I have come back and I need money to start me off."

The brother agreed to give him funds on condition that he never show his face in the neighborhood again.

The deserter walked off with the money to celebrate his return at a public ball in the Boulevard de Grenelle. There he picked a quarrel and within half an hour was carried out with a fatal stab in the abdomen.

Now Murderer

Another deserter who was also among the "missing" of the Chemin des Dames battle turned up at his father's farm in the Morbihan department. A neighbor who happened to be present remarked that he was not yet safe, as the senate had not yet adopted the amnesty law. The deserter, angered by this interference, cried "You'd be capable of denouncing me," drew a knife and plunged it into the neighbor's breast. This deserter is now again a fugitive from justice.

More than 1,200 French deserters living in Geneva, where they have formed a "Friendly Association of Deserters," are preparing to come back in a body. Other Swiss towns shelter as many if not more and there are supposed to be a great many still in Germany.

The Little Red Hen

"PUCK, puck, puck, pucKAYah" cackles the little red hen, as she steps off the warm nest, broadcasting to the barnyard that she has just laid a fine, fresh egg. She makes a product that any "manufacturer" might be proud of, and doesn't hesitate to advertise the fact.

A duck egg might be just as good, but the duck evidently doesn't think so. She doesn't advertise, and duck eggs have no market.

To be absolutely sure in buying ANY merchandise stick to the advertised brands. For their manufacturers believe in them and tell you about them daily in the advertising columns of this newspaper, over their signatures.

The duck-egg brands might be just as good, but you cannot be sure, if the manufacturers themselves will not admit it!

Read the advertisements regularly. Buy from them. You will then know the source of the products, and whom to look to if they don't measure up.
