Social Crediter Catches CCFer Eavesdropping

NANAIMO (CP)—An official of the Social Credit party claimed today that a "CCF Peeping Tom" tried to overhear Social Credit policy secrets while perched on a ladder.

Ed Brewster, president of the Nanaimo constituency Social Credit Association said he caught a "leading CCFer in Nanaimo" crouching on a ladder under his window early Wednesday "in an attempt to hear valuable Social Credit information being discussed" by himself and his wife.

Brewster said he chased the man and cornered him but let him go after identifying him.

He said he had turned over the matter to the RCMP but the Mounties said they had dropped the case because of insufficient identification.

Brewster said the snooper "was definitely on political missions."

Tourists To See Kalahari Desert Game Sanctuary

PRETORIA, South Africa (CP)—Attractions rivalling those of the famed Kruger National Park await the tourist in the arid, sand-duned Kalahari Desert of Southc Africa.

The National Parks Board of Trustees has decided to open to the public—probably next year—the Kalahari National Park. The park, constituted in 1931, has so far remained inaccessible to the public. About 8,000 square miles in area, it lies half in northwest Cape province and half in Bechuanaland Protectorate, bordered on the west by south-west Africa.

The park is rich in animal life. It contains thousands of gemsbok, a fine species of buck, in their natural home, as well as large numbers of springbok, wildebeest and red hartebeest. Wild ostrich, the kalahari lion, leopard, hyena, cheetah, jackal, wild dog and other animals are also found. There are also birds in numerous varieties.

BIG ATTRACTIONS

Many of these animals are found in the Kruger National Park, but there are no springbok there. The Kalahari lion, a tawny, golden-maned animal, is slightly smaller than the Kruger park lion.

Dr. Theophilus G. Nel, national parks biologist, describes the bird life as "magnificent."

In addition, there are the Bushmen, remnants of the aboriginal race of South Africa. Yellow-skinned and small, they are nomads, without social or religious institutions as their forbears did.

The bushmen are a dwindling race—there are only 22,000. But in Kalahari they will be employed as guides and tourists will be able to see several small settlements of bushmen living in their natural environment.

To overcome transport problems, the board of trustees is planning to use camels and light cars. Seventy-four camels are being trained to serve as mounts for tourists.

Alcan Cooks' Wage Boosted

VANCOUVER (CP)—Five hundred cooks, waiters and mess hall attendants working at the Aluminum Company project in northern B.C. have a new wage contract. It provides for rates ranging from $2.10 an hour for first cooks to $1.30 for bull cooks. Twelve camps operate on the big northern project.

Holdup Play Is Robbery When Mr. Muzzy Uses It

Many people get well paid for teaching. Others—especially bridge players—seem willing to pay for the privilege.

Teaching Mr. Muzzy is not only expensive. It is also frustrating. It takes a long time to get him started using a valuable device—like the hold-up play, for example. And when he does begin to use it, it's murder.

In today's deal, Mr. Dale opened the seven of spades against Mr. Muzzy's three no trump contract. This was no place for the hold-up play. But Mr. Muzzy thought it was.

They weren't going to catch him winning the first trick with the ace of spades. No, he played the six from dummy, nodding his head sagely as if he knew where all the cards were.

Mrs. Keen won with the queen and returned the suit. Dummy's lone ace won and now there was no play for nine tricks without getting into the diamond suit. Mr. Dale won the first diamond and ran enough spades to defeat the contract.

As Mr. Champion pointed out, the ace of spades is the correct play at trick one in this situation. If Mr. Dale had started with four spades, there is no problem, as the opponents can then win just three spades and a diamond. If Mr. Dale had five spades, then Mrs. Keen could have only two.

And one of those two is almost certain to be an honor. The reason is that if Mr. Dale had held king, queen and jack, he would have led the king, not a small spade.

Playing the ace at trick one, then, leaves Mrs. Keen with a singleton honor—which blocks the suit. In other words, when Mr. Dale is in with the ace of diamonds he cannot lay down the king of spades, dropping his partner's honor, as that would give Mr. Muzzy a stopper with his 10 spot. And if he leads a low spade to Mrs. Keen's honor, she could not return the suit.

Mr. Champion explained all this in detail, but Mr. Muzzy finally saw a way to stop the flow of words.

"I meant to play the ace of spades," he lied, "and I pulled out the six spot by mistake."
