ANCIENT

opening ceremonies was the investment of Mrs. William Sargent of Hazelton with the title of Chief We-n-oake, (meaning "The Big Fin of the Whale",) which permits her to be an honorary member of the Killer Whale Clan actual opening of the Treasure House and its exhibits to the public.

After the public had visited the building, the raising of the Gitdem-muldo pole was attended by further ceremony. The pole, originally raised in 1888 had been brought down to the river from behind the village where it had fallen down. Now restored it will last a great many more years in it's new location.

The raising of the pole ceremony featured dancing, singing, drumming and band music, as each of the villages took part introduced by the master of ceremonies in his birdlike cloak, Charles Patsy.

Pay of RCMP under study says Fulton

OTAWA (CP)— Justice Minister Fulton said Friday that the question of the pay and salary scale of the RCMP is a matter of "real concern" to himself and the cabinet.

Noting that the pay of federal government employees now is under study by the finance department, he said he hopes to be able to give a report on the matter. But he could not say when that would be.

The minister's attention had been drawn in the Commons by Frank Howard (CCF-Skeena) to articles in the Ottawa Citizen and the Vancouver Province to the effect that the RCMP is having recruiting difficulties and is losing present members because of low wages.

$1½ million plant

VANCOUVER (CP) —The Commonwealth's most productive saw mill is being powered now by a $1,500,000 electric power plant, fuelled by wood waste.

A spokesman for Eburne Saw Mills and Huntting-Merritt Shingle division of Canadian Forest Products Limited, which last year cut 140,000,000 board feet, says the electric plant produces fuel for "less than nothing."

PRINCE GEORGE, B.C. (CP) — Margaret Granny Seymour marked her 108th birthday here Sunday, although no one was quite sure if it was the right date.

There was no special celebrations in the little home at nearby South Fort George which she shares with a daughter, Minnie Brown, because Granny is in poor health. She spent several weeks in hospital earlier this year with pneumonia.

ALTONA, Man. (CP)—A wheel of Cornelius Krahn's tractor was spinning in a water-filled ditch when a reporter happened along, but that's the way Mr. Krahn wanted it. By jacking up the wheel and letting it spin he was pushing water from a drainage ditch into a farm dug-out.

BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

There was an optical illusion in this hand. Things were not quite as simple as Mr. Abel believed them to be. A trump was opened and Mrs. Keen won with the ace and returned a trump.

Mr. Abel won the second trick with the jack of hearts and paused to check on his chances. The problem looked easy enough. He could count nine sure winners—four hearts, three spades and the minor suit aces.

As he saw it, the tenth trick depended upon luck. If both minor suit kings were behind dummy's queens, he would go set. If one or both of these kings were on his left, he would make his contract.

He shrugged and continued the play, cashing the king of trumps. He followed with the trey of spades and dummy's king held the trick. He returned a spade and the 10 lost to the ace.

Mr. Dale

Mr. Dale returned a diamond and at this point Mr. Abel had to make the vital decision as to which minor suit queen might bring in the game-going trick.

There was no turning back and he would have no second chance. After considerable and fruitless thought he elected to finesse the queen of diamonds. That lost, and since he was bound to lose a club, the contract was doomed.

He could have given himself the opportunity of trying to win both minor suit queens—and without jeopardizing his chances for the contract. He had not considered it important to go after the minors in any particular order. But the order was all-important.

Since there was a trick to lose in clubs in any case clubs should have been tried first. After picking up the last adverse trump he should have led a low club. If a small card appeared on his left he would go up with dummy's queen. And even if that lost to the king, the enemy would not be in a position to set the contract immediately.

Mr. Abel would have one more chance—the diamond finesse—and if that worked he would still make his contract, discarding a small club on dummy's ace of diamonds.

As the cards were actually arranged, dummy's queen of clubs would win either the first or second round of that suit so that there would no longer be any reason to risk the finesse in diamonds.
