Blackwood on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Although Mr. Dale held two aces and four of his partner's hearts with two honors, his stodgy distribution convinced him that a single raise was his best action. However, Mr. Masters' following two-spade bid indicated a continuing interest in a game contract.

Mr. Dale was not expected to pass that bid. It was unlikely that he would be able to raise spades and Mr. Masters knew that. But he now had a chance and an obligation to clarify his first call. His partner wanted him to indicate whether his single heart raise was of the courtesy variety or whether it was a maximum.

He properly considered it a maximum and jumped to the heart game. In this particular case, if he had bid only three hearts, Mr. Masters would have passed.

Mr. Dale

Mr. Masters won the opening diamond lead with the ace and looked the situation over. Outside of the trump suit he had four winners in high cards. One more trick might be developed in spades or in diamonds if either suit broke evenly but the odds were against such a division.

To try to get two ruffs in dummy would involve giving up the lead three times—once in spades and twice in diamonds. Presumably this would give the enemy three opportunities to lead trumps and obviously that would be fatal to the plan of getting six tricks out of the heart suit.

Mr. Masters quickly saw that his best bet was to ruff twice in his own hand. So beginning at trick two he cashed the ace and king of hearts. He was not worried by the fact that Mr. Keen showed out on the second heart lead.

He led to dummy's ace of clubs, returned a club and ruffed it with the six of hearts. Next he cashed the king and ace of spades, led dummy's last club and ruffed with the queen of hearts. That made eight tricks and the good jack and ten of hearts in dummy filled the requirements of the contract.

This device of using your own trumps to ruff with, and dummy's to pull the opposing trumps, is known as reversing the dummy. To recognize the need for the play, "place" yourself across the table and imagine that your own hand is the dummy. Viewed from this angle, the winning line of play for a vital extra trick will often become crystal-clear.
