A radio communications system, used successfully on the Royal Train during the Queen's visit to Canada last year, has been introduced by Canadian National Railways on all freight and passenger trains operating in the mountain area of British Columbia and Alberta.

The system, instituted from Vancouver and Prince George to Edmonton, will improve train operating efficiency.

By means of two-way radio, engineers and train crews can now communicate with the ease of making a 'phone call. Messages also can be exchanged between trains in the same territory, between trains and yard offices, and between train crews and despatchers.

BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

This hand contained an optical illusion for the careless or over-optimistic declarer. The trey of hearts was led and at first glance the contract looked safe and easy.

Mrs. Fusty could lose a club and still win four tricks in that suit. There were always two diamonds and a spade in top cards. And even if the heart finesse lost, there were two tricks there, for a total of nine.

But Mrs. Fusty proceeded cautiously. Her first good play was to forego the obvious heart finesse and win the first trick with the ace. She reasoned, correctly, that if Mr. Masters won the first trick with the king of hearts and shifted to a spade the hand might blow up in her face.

Mrs. Fusty

On the other hand, she could stand a spade lead from her left because, playing last to the trick, she would have two sure stoppers in the suit. She wisely decided to take every possible step to keep Masters from gaining the lead.

Instead of coming to her hand with the king of clubs for a "natural" second round finesse of the jack, she laid down dummy's ace. Noting the fall of the ten spot on her left, she now pulled the jack from the board and let it ride when it was not covered.

When this won, she led dummy's queen of hearts to establish a second trick in that suit. The king won and at this point she got the spade shift. But now she didn't care. She already had ten sure winners.

If she took the heart finesse at trick one, Mr. Masters would win and return a low spade. There would be no better play than the jack from the closed hand and Mr. Champion would win with the king and return the suit to drive out the ace.

The bidding:

Opening lead: Trey of hearts.

The defenders would then be in a position to cash enough spade tricks to defeat the contract, if they got in. Mrs. Fusty would have to play the clubs just right to make nine tricks.

As the play actually went, she saw beyond the obvious line of play and took every possible precaution to insure the winning of nine tricks. It was no more than right that her play brought in all five clubs and a total of ten tricks on the hand.

EVEREST'S HEIGHT

TOKYO (AP)— The Communist Chinese team which reported they topped Mount Everest last month calculated the peak elevation at 29,133 feet, according to Peiping radio. For almost a century it was figured at 29,002 feet. The Indian government in 1954 said it was 29,028 feet, with a 20-foot fluctuation for snow, and this is the figure accepted by the U.S. National Geographic Society.
