Blackwood on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

"Just a question of whether it's six or seven, partner," announced Mr. Muzzy as he won the first trick in today's hand with the ace of hearts. His estimate was based on the belief that if the club finesse was successful, he could set up a long club for a spade discard. He could then ruff his two heart losers and win all the tricks.

At trick two he cashed the king of diamonds, then led the six of clubs and put in the queen from dummy. Mr. Dale won with the king of clubs and returned a spade. Mr. Muzzy won with dummy's ace, returned to his hand with a diamond and led his nine of clubs.

Here Mr. Abel showed out of clubs, discarding a small heart. And since Mr. Dale had all of dummy's remaining clubs topped, Mr. Muzzy had no place to discard his spade loser and he was down one.

Mr. Muzzy

"What kind of a play was that?" complained Mr. Heinsite, referring to the first club lead.

"That was a finesse," replied Mr. Muzzy seriously. "What other play have I got?"

"You don't need any other play if you handle it right," said Mr. Heinsite pompously. "It's not enough to know what a finesse is. You've got to know how to finesse. Just lead the nine of clubs first and let it ride. Dale will win with the jack, but as soon as you get in again you can cash the ace of clubs, pull the queen through to ruff out the king and set up the ten spot."

Mr. Dale came to Mr. Muzzy's rescue. "I admit Muzzy played the clubs wrong, Heinsite," he said, "but your way isn't the best way, either. Suppose I had held the lone jack and Abel had started with five to the king. With that setup, your play is not good.

"The play that protects against any 5-1 club break is to cash the ace of clubs first, then go to the closed hand and lead the nine. Now if Abel started with five to the king, he will have to win it or go without any club winner.

"If I have five to the king-jack, the nine will force out the jack and Muzzy can then pull the queen through and set up the ten for a spade discard."

"I was just about to mention that line of play," lied Mr. Heinsite, who is a hard man to trap in an error.
