Iced Fillets of Fish Are Latest

Biological Board Conducts Experiments in East With Great Success

When at Jasper recently, the editor of this paper met Herbert H. Bishop, vice-president and general manager of the Robert Simpson Eastern Ltd., of Toronto, who told him of the wonderful success of the latest method of curing and marketing fish. This is by means of what are known as "iced fillets." They are ordinary small fillets frozen by the recently perfected quick freezing process and then packed in cardboard cartons and kept frozen until they reach the kitchen when without any previous thawing they are placed in the frying pan. They are said to be delicious.

The process has been worked out by the Biological Board experts under Dr. Huntsman and is said to be one of the most successful commercial experiments made by them. It is likely to revolutionize the whole fishing industry.
