Vets' Group Factor In W. Germany

By JOHN EARLE

BONN (Reuters) — Germany's main veterans' organizations are competing hotly to sign up the millions of West German ex-servicemen.

The winner in this recruiting campaign may determine whether the former soldiers, organized as such, will be a major force in West German politics; and, if they are, whether they will back the Bonn republic or the Nationalist right.

The three main veterans' groups are:

1. The Union of German Soldiers, a loosely-knit grouping of old comrades' associations such as the Afrika Korps, the "Green Devils" paratroopers, the S.S. men. Formed in September to include all local organizations, it pledged support to the Bonn Germany but claimed that otherwise it would be non-political.

2. The Stahlhelm (Steel Helmet), an avowedly "anti-Bolshevist" political organization.

3. The Kyffhaeuser League, which limits itself to welfare work.

The Union of German Soldiers soon ran into difficulties with the Bonn government. Its provisional president, Col.-Gen. Hans Friessener, 59, publicly condemned the July 1944 plot against Hitler's life and defended the German soldiers who in 1939 invaded Poland. The government rebuked the Union's leaders for breaking their undertaking not to take part in politics.

Since then there have been signs that the Union has met further trouble in its own ranks.

Local paratroop branches have complained that it is not democratic enough and that too many generals are in senior positions. There have been calls for Gen. Friessener's removal.

FIGHTS BOLSHEVISM

The Stahlhelm works less publicly. Its headquarters—on the patched-up top floor of a bomb-damaged building in Cologue, adorned with Imperial German flags—have a "cloak and dagger" atmosphere.

Its program, avowedly political, is couched in vague, semi-mysterious terms. A spokesman, who asked that his name not be disclosed, said: "Our practical task is to fight Bolshevism. We would not stand idly by if the states were threatened by Marxism."

Stahlhelm is a re-foundation of the nationalist, para-military force absorbed into Hitler's S.A. (Brownshirts). Claims that it has over 130,000 members are doubted by Allied and West German officials.

With an eye to the future, it aims at attracting youth. Its spokesman says that the "young Stahlhelm" has 7,000 members, whom they would like to put in uniform and equip with small arms.

The "Kyffhaeuser League" is led by a former Prussian Guards commander, Gen. Wilhelm Reinhardt, who says: "We reject politics. Our task is social."

The League, founded in the last century, numbered 3,000,000 members, paying 30 pfennings (about 7 cents) dues a month, when Hitler dissolved it in 1943.

Its activities were to maintain a chain of homes in Germany for veterans and their dependents in distress, to provide financial help for the sick—cancer sufferers could have operations paid for—and to encourage the spirit of old comradeship at home and abroad.

Hitler confiscated its property as well as its 40,000,000 reichsmarks asset—"funds gathered from the pennies of poor people," Gen. Reinhardt says.

Today, the League, trying to reorganize in face of rivalry, finds itself involved in expensive legal wrangles over the return of its homes from the state government.
