BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

When it is in your power to give up an unavoidable loser to either defender, a very marked favoritism should be shown. Often a contract depends on which defenders is permitted to gain the lead. In this deal Mr. Muzzy gave no thought to this important factor.

He got the king of spades opening and won with the ace. He took three rounds of trumps, ending in his hand. And now he became obsessed with the idea of how good he would look if he could find the king of clubs on his left, guarded not more than twice.

He would take the club finesse and lose no tricks in that suit. On the third round of clubs he would discard his trey of spades and lose no tricks in that suit.

Mr. Muzzy

On the fourth club he would pitch a diamond. Then he would lead a diamond, and if the ace was on his right, he could win a trick later with the king, ruff his last diamond and make six-odd.

This dream was of short duration. On the first club finesse Mrs. Keen won with the king, returned a diamond and Mr. Meek collected two diamond tricks and a spade to put the contract down one. Mr. Muzzy had fallen somewhat short of his mythical slam—three full tricks short.

Mr. Champion shook his head in disgust. "Trying to get rid of one lousy spade loser and you lose a club and two diamonds in the process," he said angrily.

He suggested that the correct line of play was to win the first trick with the ace of spades and then to cash the king, queen and jack of hearts, leaving the ace on the board. Now lead the trey of spades toward dummy's jack.

Mr. Meek would have to win with the queen and would have no better return than a club. Put up dummy's ace of clubs, lead the jack of spades and discard the last club from the closed hand. Then lead clubs from the board.

As long as Mrs. Keen does not play the king, discard diamonds from the closed hand. If and when Mrs. Keen puts up the king, ruff the trick, go to dummy with the ace of hearts and cash whatever remaining tricks there are.

If Mr. Meek turns up with the king of clubs he will win a trick with it, but from his side of the table it will not be possible to cash more than one diamond and the defenders would get only one spade, one club and one diamond.

UNSEEN BENEFITS

ble values of camp that are set down by the American Camping Association. They are happiness, co-operation, appreciation, comradeship, health, adventure, life adjustment, inspiration, independence and good citizenship.

"These are the things we hope for, even more than teaching the children to swim or paddle a canoe."

Miss Purdy, who has been an enthusiastic camper since she was a child, says camping gives city children a wonderful opportunity to see the country.

"Some of them have never actually seen the sun rise or set," she explained.

Each child is an individual to the camp staff, and the camp does a really good job only if each child shows increased skills or increased maturity.
