Blackwood on BRIDGE

One test of a superior defensive player is the ability to know when he is licked—that is, to sense the situation where declarer has the cards to make his contract against normal defense.

In these cases, such a defender has the courage to resort to deception, however risky that may be, in an effort to beat an "unbeatable" contract.

In today's deal Mr. Dale led the jack of spades and Mr. Abel properly ducked in dummy and won in his hand with the king. A survey of his prospects told him he had to bring in three diamond tricks to make his contract. So he led to dummy's king, returned a diamond and finessed the jack.

Mr. Dale

Mr. Dale won with the queen. He decided there was no way to beat three no trump by staight nomal play. As you see, he was quite right. Mr. Abel had four winners in clubs, three in diamonds, the ace of hearts and the spade trick already won.

If Mr. Dale cashed the ace of spades, dummy's queen would furnish an extra trick. But he realized that the ace of spades would be a give-up play. His actual return was the 10 of spades!

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	3 NT	All Pass

Opening lead: Jack of spades.

It's easy enough to say that you would play the queen from dummy. But remember that Mr. Abel could see only his own hand and the dummy. His first thought was to put up the queen.

But then it occurred to him that Mr. Dale would have led just as he did, if he had started with a spade holding of J 10 9 8 2. That would give Mrs. Keen an original spade holding of an A 7 6 and in that case the winning play would be to duck in dummy so that the ace would block the suit on the third round.

Mr. Abel had a tough guess and he guessed wrong. He ducked the ten of spades and Mr. Dale then cashed the ace and ran the rest of the suit to break the contract.

Of course Mr. Abel had left himself wide open in the play. In an effort to avoid what actually happened to him, he should have played the ace of diamonds first, then a low diamond, with the intention of ducking a diamond lead into Mrs. Keen's hand. A spade lead from her side of the table would not have been dangerous. As it happened, his reward for this correct play would have been would have made an easy 10 tricks.
