MERELY MABEL REMARKS

That Prince Rupert owes a debt of gratitude to all those who have just invested in new slicker suits. Isn't the sunshine grand?

That the said slickers may come in handy for occasional visits to Vancouver.

That rain is over and gone, and the voice of the real estate agent revives in the land.

That the new stock company is welcome as the flowers in May, memories of the Bostonians notwithstanding.

That Chief Vickers seems to have had a piping time of it last night.

That when the policeman pops in at the door the hop-hopper hops out of the window.

That good old days be darned, it's great to get around so your friends can recognize you.

That smile WON'T you? Smile!

That that that that that last line starts off with is not needed, not that that matters, does it?
