BLEW UP SHIP FOR SPECTACLE

Former U.S. Steamship Cost Movie People $125,000 For Explosion

"The Half Way Girl," here tonight, is an Oriental drama with locale laid in Singapore and the Indian ocean. The biggest scene in the picture shows a huge ocean-going liner blown to atoms at sea when a cargo of benzine explodes. Earl Hudson, producer of "The Lost World," supervised the making of the picture.

Hudson wanted a thrill that would surpass anything the screen had witnessed. So he purchased the former United States Shipping Board steamer Corvallis, built by the government during the war at a cost of $900,000. The steamer was renamed the Mandalay for the purpose of the picture, and startling scenes of a ship on fire at sea were filmed with Miss Kenyon and Hughes narrowly escaping death several times and with panics so real that many of the extra players through an over display of zeal required medical attention.

Dynamite in Hold

Then the Mandalay was taken out to sea 125 miles off Sandy Hook to be blown up for the climax of the sequence. Ten tons of dynamite were placed in her hold, five tons in the bow and five in the stern. One thousand pounds of blasting powder were placed in the superstructure and the whole joined up by fuses and electric wires.

Alfred Sorrenson and his son, William, noted throughout the world as expert dynamiters, handled the blasting. They were solitary passengers on the Mandalay the night she was towed to sea with the explosive planted.

A terrific electrical storm broke during the early evening and continued throughout the night. Lightning flashed about the Mandalay, and for hours cameramen, First National officials and members of the crews of five tugs towing the steamer and carrying the camera-men stayed awake, fearing the load of death would be struck.

The ship rode safely through the storm. Just as preparations were completed for the dynamiting the next morning, the Coast Guard cutter Seneca appeared and ordered the steamer twenty-five miles farther out to sea. It was after 7 o'clock in the evening when the steamer reached the location selected by the Coast Guard officials, and the sum was behind the clouds.

Flames Streak Heavens

It was a spectacle the like of which has been seen by but few persons. Huge timbers were tossed five hundred feet, and flames streaked to the heavens. When the smoke cleared the nose of the Mandalay was beneath the surface and she was slipping rapidly to her last resting place. In five minutes she was gone.

A $900,000 ship had been sent to the bottom of the Atalantic for one thrill in a picture. But the cost was more than that of the actual building.

First National paid, according to Hudson, approximately $125,000 for the ship and the incidental expense that went with the filming of the fire and explosion scenes.

THREE WOMEN LOVE ONE MAN RESULTS DISASTROUS TO ALL

"Three Women" is a Curious Mix-up of Matrimonial Tangles and the End is Curious

Another Warner Bros. Classic of the Screen is to be presented to the public at the Westholme Theatre Wednesday and Thursday. With memories of "The Marriage Circle" still lingering, theatre-goers will look forward to seeing a production equal in merit. They will not be disappointed. First of all, Ernst Lubitsch is the director, and his successful productions are still fresh in our minds. Secondly, the Warner Bros. have chosen a cast which will do justice to this Classic of the Screen.

"Three Women" deals with the love affairs of three women for one man. At first he is in love with a middle-aged widow, Mrs. Wilton, or rather with her money; then he becomes infatuated with her daughter, whom he marries. Still not content, he has an affair with another, to the chagrin of his wife and her mother. Mrs. Wilton, in a fury, comes to demand her daughter's release, but Lamont merely laughs at her and hints at her still being in love with him. Then comes the tragedy when Lamont is killed by his mother-in-law and former sweetheart. Days of suspense follow for the mother and daughter before the trial, but the picture comes to a happy conclusion when a verdict of "not guilty" is brought in by the jury and the girl gives her love to a former sweetheart.

Exciting Race to Reach Land Office and Marvellous Escape From Forest Fire

Of the many tremendous action scenes in the picture, two, in particular, stand out by virtue of their intrinsic dramatic value and the startling realism with which they are depicted.

The first is an exciting, nerve-racking race to the sheriff's land office between Moore on horseback and Butler and Hartigan in an automobile. The first to reach the sheriff's office will be awarded the deed to a valuable piece of land that had been unexpectedly opened up to homesteaders. It looks hopeless for Moore, despite the fact that he has fresh horses stationed along the road. By hard riding he manages to catch up with his rivals, and as they near the office, Moore throws himself from the horse into the automobile and is the first to jump out and rush into the office.

The second spectacular scene is the raging forest fire that sweeps down from the mountainside and traps Moore and Miss Bennett in their cabin. They attempt to escape on Moore's horse, knowing there is a chance of the animal finding its way out of the forest. Moore, however, falls off and the girl turns back to aid him. This delay apparently seals their doom, for they find themselves hemmed in on all sides by the flames. Desperately they battle through until they reach a high cliff overlooking a river. Without a moment's hesitation, horse and riders make a daring leap—a sheer drop of several hundred feet—into the waters below. It is a scene that will thrill even the hardened critic.
