Blackwood on BRIDGE

You couldn't say the bidding of today's hand was bad. But there was too much of it—especially with an alert defender like Mr. Dale listening in.

It's wonderful what clues you can get from the bidding sequence. Mr. Dale got one here which enabled him to pull out of a hopeless-looking situation with a plus score.

The king of spades appears to be the normal opening lead. But Mr. Dale thought there were two things against it. First, he knew his opponents were sound bidders. They had checked on aces and they knew there was one ace outstanding. Was it likely that they also had a second-round spade loser? Mr. Dale thought not.

Mr. Dale

On the bidding it appeared to him that Mr. Champion held at least nine cards in the red suits. He thought it very probable that the other four were divided 3-1 rather than 2-2 and that the singleton would be a spade.

The second argument against the spade opening was the simple fact that there was another lead which appeared to have an excellent chance for success — the lead of a diamond.

Mrs. Keen had bid diamonds, Mr. Champion had jump-raised diamonds and Mr. Dale himself had four cards in the suit. How many diamonds could Mr. Abel have? Surely not more than one and possibly none at all.

With the ace of trumps in his hand, Mr. Dale was certain that he could regain the lead before his partner's trumps could be extracted—assuming of course that Mr. Abel had as many as two trumps.

So his opening lead was a diamond. Mr. Champion won with the jack and led a low heart. Mr. Dale went right in with the ace and fired a second diamond which his partner ruffed for the setting trick.

On a spade opening, Mr. Champion would have had time to knock out the ace of trumps while Mr. Abel still had a diamond in his hand.
