BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

In many close hands it is not only necessary to play your own and dummy's cards correctly, but also to play in such a manner as to make the enemy's probable defence ineffective.

In this deal, Mr. Abel felt that his side had little chance of defeating four hearts and his four spade call was practically automatic.

Surely it could not be set more than one or two tricks and there might even be a chance to make it.

The queen of clubs was opened and Mr. Heinsite won with the ace and returned the jack. Mr. Abel won the second trick with the king of clubs.

He reasoned soundly that on the bidding, the ace of spades was almost surely on his right. Since the jack and ten were also outstanding, it stood out that spades should be led from the board, up to the king-queen. Very good, but not good enough.

Mr. Abel

At trick three, he led to dummy's ace of diamonds and returned a spade. Mr. Heinsite played the ten and the queen won. Another diamond put dummy in again for another spade lead.

Here Mr. Heinsite made a good play. He won with the ace of spades and led the deuce of hearts. Miss Brash won with the king and caught on quickly. She returned a diamond and Mr. Heinsite ruffed for the setting trick.

Mr. Heinsite was not satisfied. "Where'd you get that two-heart bid on a king and a queen, partner?" he demanded. "I had to make a terrific play of underleading my ace-queen of hearts to beat them even one trick."

"Stop falling in love with yourself," sneered Mr. Champion. "Your heart lead was routine. With practically everything else showing, your partner had to have the king. Besides, you're lucky to get any kind of a plus score. Abel can always make the hand by leading the 10 of hearts at trick five."

Mr. Champion was right. A heart lead would have cut the communication between the defenders' hands. After losing the heart he could win any return and then lead diamonds to dummy and spades back toward his hand, as before.

Whenever Mr. Heinsite stepped in with the ace of trumps he would have no way to put his partner in the lead.
