BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Mr. New, the avid kibitzer, talks a great game. He is very glib about coups, squeezes and end plays. He can give you the standard safety play for every combination of cards. In short, he can do everything but play the game.

In today's deal he proved that there is such a thing as being too safe. The opening lead was the queen of hearts and he let it win. This is often the correct play, particularly at a no trump contract, and the purpose is to cut the communication between the defenders' hands and arrange the timing of the hand to your advantage. In this deal, however, other considerations outweighed those just mentioned.

At trick two Mrs. Keen led another heart and dummy's ace won. With the damage already done, Mr. New went after the club suit.

Mr. New

He elected to play "safely" here too and, as you see, any attempt to win all five clubs would have met with disaster. Mr. New's purpose was to make sure of four club winners.

At trick three he cashed dummy's ace of clubs, then led the deuce. If Mr. Dale played low, he intended to put in the nine. The nine would either hold the trick or, if it lost, the opposing clubs would be divided 3-2, the most favorable division.

If Mr. Dale played the ten on the second club lead, Mr. New planed to win it with the king and fire back the nine, which would drive out the queen to establish the rest of the suit. Either way, he thought, four clubs could be won.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	Pass	2 NT	Pass
3 NT	All Pass

Opening lead: Queen of hearts.

He had used the standard safety play for this combination of cards all right, but see what happened. On the second club Mr. Dale played the ten. Mr. New won with the king and returned the nine, remarking complacently that Mr. Dale could take his queen any time. Mr. Dale made the right choice. He let the nine win.

Now it dawned on Mr. New that he needed two entries to dummy to set the clubs. He had just one, the ace of diamonds He went to dummy with that card and took the spade finesse. That lost and the contract was down one.

With the safety play in clubs available for four winners, there was no good reason for the hold-up in hearts at trick one. Mr. New should have won the first trick in his hand and started the clubs at once. The ace of hearts would have furnished the vital additional entry to the board later in the play.
