Removal of Controls . . .

One of the happy aftermaths of "V-E Day" is the gradual removal of restrictions imposed as measures of wartime necessity.

These were exceedingly strict and often irksome to the hitherto free people of the British Isles, but loyalty accepted as an inevitable consequence of the daily life or death struggle which they endured for more than five weary years.

Now they rejoice in the removal of the deadly "blackout," the return of bright lights and with gladness welcome the elimination of other restrictions involving movement or travel, censorship, employment and purchases.

To us in Canada, controls imposed by the government were also accepted as essential and urgent. We believed them necessary and in general it can be said that we cheerfully accepted the imposition of many restrictions to our freedom as a vital share in the war effort. We believe the government acted wisely in instituting such controls and while we may not always have agreed on the means by which they were maintained, many of them stand out in their effectiveness as a pattern to other countries.

However, with the feelings of relief we watch for the removal of these regimented regulations and the return of our former freedom. Already, there are signs of this. No longer does a women require official permission to secure or change her employment. She may select her sphere of service, instead of being directed by officialdom. While men are not yet allowed such freedom of action, we hope the day is not far off when equal freedom of choice will once more be the privilege of the individual.

People have learned much from the experience of the last five years. For example, they know the merit and inconvenience of "cash and carry" as against an accumulation of unpaid bills, or the folly of fifty miles an hour when thirty is sufficient.

We believe that in future many citizens will be found exercising a wise, personal control over wastage of effort, or materials, or idle extravagance. Such self-imposed discipline will prove of far greater worth to the country, than the coldly impersonal and therefore often unfair result of government control.

LETTERBOX

UNANSWERED QUESTIONS

Editor, Daily News:

I attended the meeting of the Progressive - Conservative party at the Oddfellows' Hall on May 29 to hear their candidate, Major J. T. Harvey. It was indeed a surprise to me that there was no question period, the meeting being abruptly adjourned by the singing of "God Save the King." The Progressive - Conservatives have held the only meeting in Prince Rupert during the election during which the audience has not had the opportunity to ask questions.

Because of the super-patriotism and expressed concern for national unity advocated by both Major Harvey and Mr. Younie in their speeches at the meeting I would like to have asked, had it been possible, the following questions:

1. How do you explain, according to the Montreal Gazette, a Conservative newspaper, the statement of Paul E. Lafontaine, Conservative representative in Quebec, that his party will not oppose five known pro-fascists—Montreal Mayor Houde, leader of the Bloc Populaire, Liguori Lacombe, Sasseville Roy, Frederic Dorion and the anti-conscriptionist Liberal P. J. Cardin?

2. Isn't it true that in 1940, when Great Britain was threatened by invasion, Arthur Meighen, the former Conservative premier of Canada, stated that industry would stage a sit-down and "lean on its oars" if the government refused to give more than 5 per cent profit on war contracts?

3. How can national unity be achieved between French and English speaking Canadians by your party when Maurice Duplessis, former Quebec premier of the Conservative party, campaigned for non-conscription in that province, in contradiction to the conscription policy of Col. George Drew, Conservative leader of Ontario?

4. Canadians, as you admit, were very much concerned about the Zombie riots, the more serious ones taking place at Terrace and Chilliwack. How is it then that General Pearkes, who is now the Progressive-Conservative candidate for Nanaimo, was officer commanding the Pacific Command at the time of the riots and yet no disciplinary action was taken by him against the rioters?

I happened to attend Major Harvey's meeting in Smithers. I asked Major Harvey the above questions 1, 2 and 3 which were not answered at that meeting.

Trusting you may find your way clear to print this letter.

WM. TURNER.

Kitwanga Sprinter Holds Championship

KITWANGA, May 31—Howard Wales, 17-year-old Hazelton sprinter, successfully defended his championship in the 100-yard dash in two meets at the Empire Day holiday. Wales outran Ken Harris at Kitwanga on May 25 after leading the field the day before at the New Hazelton sports meet. Harris had won the 100-yard sprint at Kitwanga the day before.

Wales, a member of the Hazelton sports club, still holds the championship, and expects to compete again at a sports day at Port Essington on July 1.
