Sport Chat

Sports in Britain swirled to an unprecedented wartime peal, in 1944 amid post-war plans eclipsing anything in history, based on widespread speculation that Germany will be smashed before D-Day's first anniversary. For more than five years this sports-loving country has queued for war - rationed entertainment such as football, cricket, racing and boxing in the face of restricted transport, the blackout and the threat of sudden death from the skies. Wartime football, of all the sports, has come nearest to preserving its peacetime program with a full list of matches through the country each Saturday, but it has been a piecemeal business with most players appearing during service leave and clubs borrowing each other's players, according to locality in which they are stationed with the forces.

Soccer is expected to hit its peacetime stride more quickly than other major sports and many reforms are in the offing. Most revolutionary of these is a demand that clubs and the public benefit from football pools which in the last year of peace attracted $187,200,000 in investments. Soccer, such an intense affair for millions, created a wartime attendance record for any sport when 90,000 jammed London's Wembley Stadium to watch the first international of the 1944-45 season a couple of months ago.

Boxing, which suffered severely from blackout restrictions, made a great comeback during 1944 aided by a handful of promising Canadian members of the armed forces. Probably the greatest surprise of the wartime ring came a couple of months ago when L. Cpl. Danny Webb, a young Canadian Army Negro from Montreal, beat Jackie Patterson of Glasgow, world fly-weight champion, in a non-title bout. Most of Britain's professional champions are veterans and everyone agrees that there is need for new blood. That augurs well for the post-war period and promoters are pinning hopes on many men now boxing in the services. Ten thousand competed this year in the British Army championships alone. Canadian Army sports thrilled thousands of British spectators during the year. Crowds thronged to ice-hockey matches arranged in the army and air force and the interest shown betokened a return to the pre-war era when leagues made up mainly of players imported from Canada caught public fancy.

Britain's busiest wartime sports period was early this fall when, in 48 hours, there were a heavy-weight boxing championship, the St. Leger classic, an international soccer match and an "all-star" at London greyhound tracks. Almost on a peacetime scale, the crowded program gave a foretaste of peacetime boom days to come.

More than 30 ice rinks will be ready for skaters when peace comes, including a number that never closed. Several others should be ready within a few months. Canadians will be the backbone of the senior teams but young Britons will be encouraged, particularly at smaller centres like Bristol and Manchester which always have been hotbeds of junior and intermediate hockey.

Peacetime Flying To Be Cheap, Easy

LONDON, Jan. 17 (AP)—A family plane as simple to use as a family car, and as economical to run, is forecast for after the war by a London firm. The plane (Chrislea Ace) will cost about $2,100 and will be a high-wing monoplane with an enclosed cabin capable of seating four persons, say its sponsors. Its range is expected to be 400 miles and cruising speed 105 miles an hour.
