BLACKWOOD on BRIDGE

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

There is a small group of theorists who consider that Mr. Dale's bid of two no trump in today's hand promises no more than a minimum opening bid. To the majority of good players, however, this call is a "go forward" bid and shows considerably more than a minimum opening.

Miss Brash naturally gave some thought to jumping all the way to four hearts at her second turn and that would have been a violent overbid. She had already shown a fair hand by responding at the two level on the first round and she had little enough for that call. She finally realized this and bid only three hearts, showing heart support and no particular liking for a no-trump contract. Mr. Dale, with good controls in the form of three aces, and a good five-card suit, carried on to game.

Mr. Dale

On the opening lead of the jack of clubs Mr. Dale decided not to risk blowing the whole hand by putting up dummy's queen. He played low from dummy and won with the ace.

A quick survey of the layout convinced him that he couldn't afford to pull trumps at this point and that trying to ruff a spade in dummy would almost surely lose the contract.

At trick two he led a diamond comforted by the thought that he would enjoy some advantages no matter which opponent held the ace. If Mr. Abel had it, the queen of clubs would be safe, at least temporarily. If Mr. Meek had it, he could lead through the queen of clubs, but on the other hand dummy's diamond suit would be in good shape for discards from the closed hand.

When dummy's king of diamonds was put up, Mr. Abel won with the ace. He returned a spade and Mr. Dale won it and led another diamond to the queen. He returned a third diamond and ruffed it high, noting the fortunate 3-3 break.

Opening lead: Jack of clubs.

Now he took three rounds of trumps, ending on the board. Dummy's two good diamonds made a total of ten available tricks. If he had attempted to ruff a spade on the board the defenders could have cashed a spade, two clubs and a diamond for a swift and brutal defeat of the contract.
