BLACKWOOD on Bridge

By EASLEY BLACKWOOD

Four-Card Suit Doesn't Always Warrant Bid

The bidding of today's hand illustrates another reason for not making a one over one response on a weak four-card suit.

When his partner opened the bidding with one club, Mr. Dale did not respond in his only four-card suit, spades. This was not because the suit was not strong enough. Four to the king meets the requirements for a biddable suit, with a little to spare.

Mr. Dale merely figured that he had a better bid available—two no trump. This single bid gave an accurate general description of his holding—a balanced hand, with no long suit, with ten-ace holdings that needed leading up to and enough strength over all to warrant a jump.

Another advantage of the jump to two no trump is that it often puts the enemy on the spot for a good opening lead. To put it the other way, a series of "beautiful approach bids" by you and partner usually gives your opponents a blueprint of your combined holding so that a child could pick out your most vulnerable spot.

It didn't make any difference which hand played today's contract although the making of nine tricks from either side took thoughtful play.

Mrs. Keen opened the six of diamonds and Mr. Abel put up the queen. Mr. Dale lost no time in playing the seven spot. A diamond was returned and now there was no possible way to defeat the contract.

Mr. Dale's king and jack stopped the suit and better, when the club finesse lost to the king, Mr. Abel had no diamonds left—and no other means of reaching his partner's hand.

If Mr. Dale had won the first trick with the king of diamonds he wouldn't have made even two no trump. He would have had to try the club finesse and when that failed a diamond lead through his jack up to the ace-ten would have enabled Mrs. Keen to run five tricks in the suit for down two.

Ex-School Teacher Praises Farm Life

ETHELTON, Sask. (CP)—Mrs. Nancy Adams thinks it's high time someone started to point out the advantages of living on a farm.

Now she is in a position to do it.

Mrs. Adams is the only woman member of a Saskatchewan royal commission appointed to investigate agricultural problems in the province.

Convincing farmers that it is good to live on a farm will be part of the job of Mrs. Adams and the six-member commission. Mrs. Adams, a university graduate, lives on a farm in the Ethelton district of central Saskatchewan.

"I'm an ex-school teacher married to a farmer," she said in an interview. "And we live on a farm because we like it."

SECURITY ON FARM

Mrs. Adams said that farm families have security—"after all, your bread is right at your door so to speak."

She doesn't think rural children lack educational opportunities today, what with radio, books and modern transportation.

Though all members of the commission will be working together studying the broad field of agricultural problems, they plan to divide into work committees.

Mrs. Adams said her interest is in aspects of rural living—special services, education and recreation specifically.

The aim of the commission, Mrs. Adams added, is to establish a "blueprint" for future farm life just as cities have planning commissions.

"We have to make services available," she said, "but we must also make the people on the farms aware of the services that are already available."

Rugged Old Car Achieving Fame After 52 Years

SHUBENACADIE, N.S. (CP)—For about as long as he can remember W. G. Nelson has been bringing his old gas buggy out of retirement each year.

Gaining fame with time and claiming to be the most-photographed automobile around these parts, Nelson's Model I Pope-Tribune came off the production line in 1900.

It was retired after nine years of faithful service and Nelson went to the west coast for a time. But his love for the vehicle remained and he soon started to bring it out of its annual "retirement" regularly.

DOES 30 M.P.H.

Still in good condition, the buggy is capable of taking to the highway for an afternoon spin at a top speed of 30 miles an hour.

Nelson finds the car a great means of meeting new people and making friends.

"I imagine that pictures of the car, many of them with tourist visitors sitting in it, now are in about every province in Canada as well as every state of the United States," he says.

The car is believed to be the first one registered in Nova Scotia and was brought to the province by the Maritime Telegraph and Telephone Company, with which Nelson worked as an inspector.

"About the only thing I had to look out for in those days," he recalls, "were street cars and the watering carts." Horses were the worst roadblock. "In the country you had to stop and let the horses by."

The vehicle is powered by a one-cylinder engine, rated at six horsepower, and has a water-cooled head. There are seats for two—but no extra comforts.
