IRISH TOWN THREATENED BY RISING RIVER SHANNON

DUBLIN (Reuters)—The swollen waters of the River Shannon edged dangerously higher under continuous heavy rain today, threatening to sweep into the isolated little town of Athlone in central Ireland.

Troops and rescuers watched anxiously as the river, already brimming over 550 square miles of the surrounding farmlands, lapped within two inches of the top of its containing wall inside the town itself.

Orders went out for immediate evacuation from the most threatened areas, an unprecedented step in the history of the town of about 8,000.
